WHY FREDERICKSBURG WAS NOT SHELLED.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Wednesday Evening, Dec. 3.

All's o'clock yesterday morning parts of two companies, numbering in all sixty men belonging to the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, under command of Capt. Wilson, who were stationed at King George Court House, were attacked by about 300 rebels, who crossed the Rappahannock in small boats, at a place between the mouth of the Court House, from the opposite side of the river, and the main body of the rebels. Surprised at the early moment, and there is reason to believe that some of them will yet return. Capt. Wilson is among the missing. How many are killed and wounded is not known. The enemy took three Good Citizens living in King George County, and who had applied to General to protect their property, and were known to be among the attacking party. They therefore gave the information which led to the attack.

The following order will issued to-day by Gen. Burnside: All officers who may be guilty of such gross neglect of duty, will then be promptly dealt with, without reference to rank.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, CAMP NEAR FALMOUTH, VA., Nov. 3.

Colonel Simon Kilpatrick, 8th Pennsylvania Cavalry, while in charge of a cavalry picket on the 1st of November, having by his negligence allowed the rebel cavalry to surprise and capture the party to be surprised, is ordered to be dismissed and a sentence of his crime to be read to his regiment, is ordered to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, the Treasury to be given for disgraceful and unmerciful conduct.

The Commanding General knows and believes that a lack of discipline in the regiment and brigade to which the officer belonged did not warrant him in so severe a sentence of crime.

By command of Major-Gen. BURNSIDE.

A flag of truce was sent over the river this morning for the purpose of conveying free dispatches of Dr. Stephen Conrad, of Fredericksburgh.

Reports from the rebels continue to arrive daily, they represent their army to be being very destitute, particularly in clothing. No mail seems has been heard since they left Maryland.

Work on under way was begun by Gen. Lee that night, which, if not taken, shows should make occupation from the new blood, otherwise to the daily [illegible]

WHY THE CITY WAS NOT SHELLED.

The Richmond Whig publishes the concluding letter of the correspondence between Gen. Burnside and the authorities of Fredericksburgh, which shows why the latter in that the city was not evacuated. The following is Gen. Burnside's reply to the Mayor's letter relating to evacuation the town:

HEADQUARTERS RIGHT GRAND DIVISION, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, FALMOUTH, VA., Nov. 21, 1862.

To the Mayor and Common Council, Fredericksburgh, Va.:

I am authorized to say that so long as no hostile demonstration is made from the town it will not be shelled. I have also to say that there will be no army upon the town before 11 o'clock A. M. to-morrow.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

E. V. SUMNER, Brevet Major-General, U. S. A., Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS RIGHT GRAND DIVISION, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, FALMOUTH, VA., Nov. 22, 1862.

To the Mayor and Common Council, Fredericksburgh, Va.:

I have received your letter of last night, in which you have given you for my letter of last night. Mr. Fenton will meet a Committee or representative from your town to-morrow morning, at 9 o'clock, at the Lacey House.

Mr. Fenton will only for the civil authorities of Fredericksburgh, but I have no objection to your having a Committee with him. I shall be ready to receive the Committee at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning, if you prefer it, and shall send a messenger to you to-day to inform you of the time. I shall be ready to receive the Committee, or, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, shall be ready to give my reasons

THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Statements from the Reports of Secretary Stanton.

A detailed synopsis of the report of Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War, was given in the TIMES of yesterday. From an official copy, carefully compared by us subsequently, we derive the following extracts, which give the language of the Report in regard to all the leading topics dis-

[illegible] ON THE ARMY OF HARRIS PORTER.

[illegible] was felt in some States at the probable success of disloyal practices tending to discourage enlistments, and the Government was signed to adopt measures of protection by temporary restraint of those engaged in these hostile acts. To that end, Provost-Marshals were appointed in each of the States upon the construction of their Governors, to act under the direction of the State Executive, and the writ of habeas corpus was suspended by your order. By order of the Department arrests were forbidden, unless authorized by the State Executive or by the Judge-Advocate. Some instances of unauthorized arrests have occurred, and when brought to the notice of the Department the parties have been immediately discharged. By a recent order, all persons arrested for discouraging enlistments, or for disloyal practices, in States where the quotas of volunteers and militia are filled up, have been released. Other persons arrested by military commanders and sent from Departments where their presence was deemed dangerous to the public safety, have been discharged upon parole to be of good behavior, and on account of hostility against the Government of the United States.

While military arrests of disloyal persons form the subject of complaint in some States, the discharge of such persons is complained of in other States.

It has been the aim of the Department to avoid any encroachments upon individual rights as far as might be consistent with public safety and the preservation of the Government. But reflecting minds will perceive that as greater encouragement can be given to the enemy, no more canger [illegible] of hostility can be perpetrated in this war, than efforts to prevent recruiting and enlistments for the armies, upon whose strength national existence depends. The expectations of the rebel leaders, and their sympathizers in loyal States, that the call for volunteers would not be answered, and that the draft could not be enforced, have failed, and nothing is left but to clamor for the means by which their hopes have been frustrated, and to strive to disarm the Government in future, if, in the chances of war, another necessity for increasing the military force should arise.

Beside aiding State authorities respecting draft and enlistment, another important duty is assigned to the Provost-Marshals. The army returns and the report of the General-in-Chief show that a large number of officers and enlisted soldiers who have drawn pay and rations are improperly absent from their posts. The pursuit of such parties, and their compulsory return to duty, is a necessary function of a Provost-Marshal, and such number only as may be required for that purpose will be retained in the service. The pay and bounty required by act of Congress to recruits have offered strong temptations to practice fraud upon the Government by false returns upon the muster-rolls, and false charges for subsistence. Diligent efforts are being made for the detection of all such practices, and to bring the guilty parties, some of whom have held respectable stations in society, before a proper civil or military tribunal as soon as the necessary preliminary investigations by the Judge-Advocate can be completed. The same course is being pursued in respect to fraudulent contractors and disbursing officers.

THE ORDNANCE BUREAU.

In general terms it may be stated that the issues by the Ordnance Department include 1,936 field and siege, and 1,836 fortification cannon, 7,264 gun carriages, caissons, mortar beds, traveling forges and battery wagons, 1,276,686 small arms, 857,201 sets of equipments and accoutrements and 219,902,127 rounds of ammunition for artillery and small arms, still leaving large supplies remaining in store at the arsenals and depots. The preaching out of the rebellion found us with insufficient supplies for the forces thereby rendered necessary, and without the means of their immediate procurement from our public arsenals and the private manufactories, fitted and ready for such work. The policy of the Department to procure all such supplies of home manufacture could not be rigidly followed, and recourse was had to purchases and importations from abroad in order to meet pressing requirements. The great demand, suddenly springing up, without any immediate increase of the supply, led to speculations and exorbitant prices. On a report from the Ordnance Bureau, in respect to outstanding contracts for arms, I appointed a commission to investigate these matters, and their report is now submitted. The measures which have been adopted to procure such supplies, by increasing the capacity of our public arsenals and developing the private resources of home manufacture, will enable this Department to obtain supplies of this description independently of importations from abroad, and at fair and reasonable rates.

The subject of arming the fortifications, particularly those defending the harbors of our principal Atlantic ports, has received special attention, and all the means at the disposal of the Department have been applied to that end, so far as was possible and consistent with meeting other imperative requirements. In consequence of the introduction into naval warfare of iron-clad vessels, comparatively safe from the effects of such batteries as had hitherto been sufficient to guard successfully against the passage of hostile vessels, it became necessary to provide heavier and more powerful ordnance. The whole system of such armament was carefully revised and amended by a Board of the most experienced and competent officers, and measures have been taken to carry their recommendations into effect.

[illegible] OF COAST AND FRONTIER DEFENCES.

The attention of the department has been earnestly directed to the forts and fortifications [illegible] the coast and frontiers. [illegible] of these [illegible] by Gen. TOTTEN, chief of engineers, and [illegible] The [illegible] by Gen. TOTTEN in his last annual report, [illegible] at $1,000,000 for permanent works, and $750,000 for temporary works. The chief of engineers reports that these sums admitted of very material progress being made at most of the important points in process of construction. This has been realized in a number of instances, and in all decided advancement has been effected. Great difficulties have been ex[illegible] the question, stone-yards, &c., owing to the demands made by the war upon the classes usually employed in this kind of work. Similar trouble has been encountered in procuring transportation for materials.

Much has been done in advancing the state of readiness of our fortifications in the principal commercial harbors for service, in preparing for additional guns, in providing for the reception of armament of very large calibre in the existing batteries, and in placing all in effective condition for defence. Like measures have been observed with reference to naval stations and our frontiers generally.

THE MEDICAL BUREAU.

The Surgeon-General represents that during the past year there has been no epidemic in the army of any severity; that the diseases which affect men in camp have been kept at a low minimum; that scurvy has been almost entirely prevented, and that there have been but few victims of yellow fever.

This Bureau required enlargement and reorganization in many particulars, and some improvements have been made. Others are suggested which require careful consideration.

The operations of the Surgical Department have been aided by humane and benevolent associations. The horrors of battle have been assuaged by ministers of mercy, and it is worthy to be recorded of the medical profession that their services have been voluntarily and gratuitously offered on every occasion. Relief associations in every State have done much to comfort and assist the sick and wounded in camps and hospitals, and their vigilant superintendence has perhaps operated to check the negligence, abuse and fraud that too often prevail even in such institutions. Religious congregations and societies have also tendered to the Government their church buildings for hospitals, while their pastors have ministered to the patients. These matters are proper to be brought to your notice, because, while war stimulates every evil passion, the virtue developed in this great struggle to maintain our national existence should not pass unnoticed.

THE QUARTERMASTER'S BUREAU—EMPLOYMENT OF CONTRABANDS.

It will be seen that the Quartermaster's Department, upon which, under the law of 17th July providing for the employment of colored persons, the charge of such persons is chiefly imposed, has not found itself burdened with their care, but that it has, on the contrary, derived valuable aid from their labor, and in a considerable portion of its field of operations has thus far suffered from a scant, rather than too great a supply of such labor. In Louisiana, where, at one time, there were apprehensions of embarrassment from the number of refugees, the reserve of a tract of rich land along the railroad to Berwick's Bay, opens up a territory in which many thousands can be profitably employed, if placed under proper regulation and control. At Port Royal such persons have been extensively employed in the work of the Quartermaster's Department, and in cultivating some thousands of acres of the sea islands of the coast, the products of which are used in the support of themselves and families. In the operations of the army on the James River and upon the Potomac, in the fortifications of Washington, and as laborers, teamsters, hostlers, in the landing and shipping of stores, they have been of great service, and the demand for their labor has exceeded the supply available.

THE WHOLE POPULATION OF THE SOUTH—ITS PLACE IN THE WAR.

No aphorism is more universally received than that "the sole object of a just war is to make the enemy feel the evils of his injustice, and by his sufferings amend his ways; he must therefore be attacked in his most accessible quarter." The power of the rebels rests upon their peculiar system of labor, which keeps laborers on their plantations to support owners who are devoting their time and strength to destroy our armies and destroy our Government. Whoever that system is in hostility to the Government, it is, in my opinion, the duty of those conducting the war to strike down the system, and turn against the rebels the productive power that upholds the insurrection. Rightly organized in the recovered territory, the laborers of the rebel States will not only aid in holding fortified positions, but their labor will, as in India, free the white soldier from the most unwholesome exposure of the South. They will cultivate the corn and forage, which will feed our cavalry and artillery horses, and save the country a portion of the enormous burden now attending their purchase and transport from the North. This cultivation would have been of greater advantage to us on the southeastern coast than even that of the great staple of the Sea Islands.

Probably the people who remained on these islands, within protection of our armies, could, under wise control, have supplied all the forage needed this year by the forces in the Department of the South. The full ration for a horse weighs twenty-six pounds, that of a soldier three pounds.

An army, well organized and equipped for active operations, with a due proportion of cavalry, artillery and baggage trains, will have not less than one horse or mule to every four soldiers; so that the weight of food for the animals is more than double that of the rations of the men.

How important an aid, how great an economy, in a long contest, therefore, would there be in raising by this cheap labor the greater part of the forage alone for the Southern Department, thus for a greater portion of our wants, transferring the base of supplies now at New-York to Hilton Head or New-Orleans.

The Department has found it difficult to transfer this labor from one part of the seat of war to another. Local and family ties seem to be very strong with these people, and with all their faith in the power and good will of our military commanders, it was found difficult to get volunteer laborers to leave Port Royal for other depots.

A population of four millions true to the interests of the Union, with slight assistance from the army, will, under proper regulation and government, be of the greatest assistance in holding the territory once recovered. The principal staples of the South are the product exclusively of their labor. If protected upon the lands they have heretofore cultivated, with some organization, and with support from small detachments of loyal troops, they would not only produce much of what is needed to feed our armies and their trains, but they would forever cut off from the rebellion the resources of a country thus occupied.

The rebel armies move with ease through portions of the Border States, living upon the country in which our commanders find no supplies. The people bring forth their hoards and offer them to the rebels for sale or gift. Protect the laboring population, who are the majority in the greater part of the South, in the possession of the land and its products, and this great advantage will, for whatever portion of the country we occupy, be transferred to us. As soon as the coast is thoroughly occupied, and the people organized, trade will arrive. Cotton, rice, sugar, and other products will be exchanged by the producer for what he needs. Their wants will be supplied direct from the Northern factories, and the cultivation of the great staples will enable them to pay for what they use. A perfectly free trade may thus again grow up between the North and the South, and with greater or less rapidity it will spread over the whole country as our forces succeed in meeting and dispersing the rebel armies.

The greater part of the whole country which formerly produced the sea island cotton is now thoroughly restored to the Union. The laborers are there—the soil and climate. It needs only assurance of protection to revive the cultivation of the staple, as well as to produce vast quantities of corn and forage for our troops. Since this war must be conducted by marches and battles and sieges, why neglect the best means to make them successful and their result permanent? It is worthy of notice that thus far the portions of territory which, once recovered, we have most firmly held, are precisely those in which the greatest proportion of colored men are found. By their assistance, our armies will be able permanently to operate in and occupy the country, and in labor for the army, in raising its and their own supplies, full occupation can be given them, and with this there will be neither occasion nor temptation to them to emigrate to a northern and less congenial climate.

Judging by experience, no colored man will leave his home in the South, if protected in that [illegible] All possible [illegible] for the North is [illegible] protection and [illegible] which they have the [illegible] has been [illegible] deeply involved in the crime of treason and rebellion. No great territory has been permanently reduced without depriving the leaders of its people of their lands and property. It is these that give power and influence. Few men have the controlling position and talent to exercise dangerous influence over their fellow men [illegible] By striking down this system of compulsory labor, which enables the leaders of the rebellion to control the resources of the people, the rebellion would die of itself.

Under no circumstances has any disposition to secede from the Union been exhibited by the enslaved population in any Southern State, while a strong loyalty to the Federal Government has been displayed on every occasion, and against every discouragement. By the means suggested, the rebellion may be disarmed and subjugated swiftly and effectually, and the lives of our own people saved from slaughter on the battle-field. By the occupation of six thousand miles of the Mississippi and the sea-coast, a market will be opened in every rebel State for the industry of our people to supply the wants of the army, and also of a loyal population, in exchange for the valuable products of their labor. Another point of attack is by armed settlements upon the vacant Government lands in Florida and Texas. Thousands, in the Northern and Western States, are impatiently waiting the signal of military movement to plant their homes in the best territory of this continent, and bring it back to the Union, as loyal States. So far from the Southern States being invincible, no enemy was ever so vulnerable, if the means at hand are employed against them. If your proposition for compensated emancipation, and a voluntary return to loyalty, be blindly rejected, still the proper application of the means at command of the Government cannot fail to accomplish the suppression of the rebellion and a restoration of those peaceful relations which were designed to be established forever on this continent by the Union of the States.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

TO THE PRESIDENT.

REPORT OF MAJOR-GEN. HALLECK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, Nov. 20, 1862.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, WASHINGTON, 1862.

THE ARMY ON THE JAMES.

SIR: In compliance with your orders, I have the honor to submit the following report of military operations since the 22d of July last, when, in compliance with the President's order, I assumed the command of the army as General-in-Chief. The first thing to which my attention was called on my arrival here was the condition of the army at Harrison's Landing, on the James River. I immediately visited Gen. McCLELLAN's headquarters for consultation. I left Washington on the 24th and returned on the 27th. The main object of this consultation was to ascertain if there was a possibility of an advance upon Richmond from Harrison's Landing, and if not, to favor some plan of uniting the armies of Gen. McCLELLAN and Gen. POPE on some other line. Not being familiar with the position and numbers of the troops in Virginia, and on the coast, I took the President's estimate of the largest number of reinforcements that could be sent to the Army of the Potomac. On the day of my arrival at Harrison's Landing, Gen. McCLELLAN was of opinion that he would require at least 50,000 additional troops. I informed him that this number could not possibly be sent, that I was not authorized to promise him over 20,000, and that I could not well see how even that number could be safely withdrawn from other places. He took the night for considering the matter, and informed me the next morning that he would make the attempt upon Richmond with the additional 20,000, but immediately on my return to Washington he telegraphed that he would require 35,000, a force which it was impossible to send him without leaving Washington and Baltimore almost defenceless. The only alternative now left was to withdraw the Army of the Potomac to some position where it could unite with that of Gen. POPE, and cover Washington at the same time that it operated against the enemy. After full consultation with my officers, I determined to attempt this junction on the Rappahannock, by bringing McCLELLAN's forces to Aquia Creek. Accordingly, on the 30th July I telegraphed to him to send away his sick as quickly as possible, preparatory to a movement of his troops. This was preliminary to the withdrawal of his entire army, which was ordered by telegraph on the 3d of August. In order that the transfer to Aquia Creek might be made as rapidly as possible, I authorized Gen. McCLELLAN to assume control of all the vessels in the James River and Chesapeake Bay, of which there was then a vast fleet. The Quartermaster-General was also requested to send to that point all the transports that could be procured. On the 5th I received a protest from Gen. McCLELLAN, dated the 4th, against the removal of the army from Harrison's Landing, a copy of which is annexed, marked Exhibit No. 1, with my reply on the 6th, marked Exhibit No. 2. On the 1st of August I ordered Gen. BURNSIDE to immediately embark his troops at Newport's News, transfer them to Aquia Creek, and take position opposite Fredericksburgh. This officer moved with great promptness, and reached Aquia Creek on the night of the 3d. His troops were immediately landed, and the transports sent back to Gen. McCLELLAN.

GEN. POPE'S MOVEMENTS.

About this time I received information that the enemy was preparing a large force to drive back Gen. POPE, and attack either Washington or Baltimore. The information was so direct and trustworthy that I could not doubt its correctness. This gave me serious uneasiness for the safety of the Capital and Maryland, and I repeatedly urged upon Gen. McCLELLAN the necessity of promptly moving his army so as to form a junction with that of Gen. POPE. The evacuation of Harrison's Landing, however, was not commenced till the 14th, eleven days after it was ordered.

Greatly discouraged at the prospect of timely aid from that quarter, I authorized Gen. POPE to order the main forces of Gen. Cox in Western Virginia, with all possible dispatch by railroad to join him on Washington. To facilitate the withdrawal of the Army of the Potomac from the Peninsula, and to gain time by a demonstration against the enemy, Gen. POPE pushed his forces across the Rappahannock, occupied Culpepper and threatened Gordonsville. JACKSON's and EWELL's forces were hurried to the Rapidan, and on the 9th of August encountered BANKS's Corps at Cedar Mountain. A hard-fought battle ensued, and on the arrival of reinforcements from the corps of Gens. McDOWELL and SIGEL, the enemy fell back upon the Rapidan and Gordonsville.

On the 15th our cavalry surprised a party of the enemy near Louisa Court-house, and captured important dispatches, showing that LEE was moving, by forced marches, the main body of the rebel army to attack POPE, before a junction could be formed between him and the Army of the Potomac. On the 16th, I telegraphed to Gen. POPE not to cross the Rapidan, and advised him to take position in rear of the Rappahannock, where he could be more easily reinforced. He commenced the movement on the 17th, and by the morning of the 18th had most of his forces behind that river, prepared to hold the passes as long as possible. He had been reinforced by KING's Division and a part of BURNSIDE's corps, under Gen. RENO, from Fredericksburgh. I also directed Gen. BURNSIDE to occupy Richard's and Barnett's Fords, which were between him and Gen. POPE's main army.

THE REBELS ATTEMPT TO CROSS THE RAPPAHANNOCK.

The enemy made several attempts to cross at different points on the Rappahannock, but was always repulsed, and our troops succeeded in holding the line of this river for eight days. It was hoped that during this time sufficient forces from the Army of the Potomac would reach Aquia Creek to enable us to prevent any further advance of LEE, and eventually, with the combined armies, to drive him back upon Richmond. On the 24th he made a flank movement, and crossed a portion of his forces at Waterloo Bridge, about twelve miles above the Rappahannock Railroad station. POPE directed an attack upon the forces which had crossed the river, hoping to cut them off, but the enemy escaped with no great loss. The annexed telegram from Gen. POPE, marked Exhibit No. 3, and dated the 25th, gives his views of the condition of affairs at that date. The enemy, however, had not fallen back, as he supposed, but on being repulsed at Waterloo Bridge, had moved further up the river and entered the valley [illegible] Gen. POPE, on the [illegible] railroad communication with Alexandria. It was of the utmost importance in sending your supplies and reinforcements." On the 26th I telegraphed: "If possible to attack the enemy in flank, do so; but the main object now is to ascertain his position." From this time till the 30th I had no communication with Gen. POPE, the telegraph lines being cut at Kettle Run by a part of JACKSON's corps under EWELL, which had marched around POPE's right and attacked his rear.

Finding it doubtful whether we could hold Rappahannock long enough to effect this junction of the two armies, I had directed a part of the Pennsylvania forces to land at Alexandria and move out by railroad as rapidly as possible. As soon as I had heard that the enemy had turned Gen. POPE's right flank and forced him to change his front, I ordered the remainder of the Army of the Potomac to Alexandria, and directed Gen. BURNSIDE to prepare to evacuate Fredericksburgh and Aquia Creek. I determined, however, to hold this position as long as possible for a base of future operations.

THE BATTLES.

Gen. POPE's dispositions at this juncture were well planned. The corps of McDOWELL and SIGEL, and the Pennsylvania Reserves, under REYNOLDS, were pushed forward to Gainesville, RENO and KEARNY were directed upon Greenwich, while HOOKER's Division were sent against EWELL along the railroad. Unfortunately, however, the movement was too late, as a large detachment of LEE's army was already east of Thoroughfare Gap. HOOKER encountered the enemy near Kettle Run, and a sharp engagement ensued. This gallant division drove EWELL a distance of five miles, the enemy leaving their dead, and many of their wounded, on the field. As McDOWELL, SIGEL and REYNOLDS had reached their positions, there was now every prospect that JACKSON would be destroyed before reinforcements could come to his relief.

On the evening of the 27th, Gen. POPE ordered Gen. PORTER to be at Bristow's Station by daylight on the morning of the 28th, with MORELL's, and also directed him to communicate to BANKS the order to move forward to Warrenton Junction. All trains were ordered this side of Cedar Run, and to be protected by a regiment of infantry, and a section of artillery. For some unexplained reasons PORTER did not comply with this order, and his corps was not in the battles of the 29th and 29th.

HEINTZELMAN's corps pressed forward to Manassas on the morning of the 28th, and forced JACKSON to retreat across Bull Run by the Centreville turnpike. McDOWELL had succeeded in checking LEE at Thoroughfare Gap, but the latter took the road from Hopeville to Newmarket, and hastened to the relief of JACKSON, who was already in rapid retreat. A portion of McDOWELL's corps encountered the retreating column on the afternoon of the 28th, near Warrenton turnpike, and a severe, but successful engagement ensued. JACKSON was again attacked on the 29th, near the old battle-ground of July, 1861. Knowing that LONGSTREET was not distant, he made a most desperate stand. The fight continued nearly all day, and was terminated only by darkness. We had gained considerable ground, but nothing was decided when the battle closed. It was renewed the next morning, and after another day's hard fighting, our forces fell back behind Bull Run, the enemy not attempting any pursuit. Two days later, however, he threw a considerable force between Chantilly and Germantown to turn POPE's right. HOOKER dislodged them after a short but severe engagement, in which Brig.-Gens. KEARNY and STEVENS, two of our very best officers, were killed. POPE's army had been reinforced by the corps of FRANKLIN and SUMNER, and no further apprehensions were felt for its safety.

During the operations of the previous week, of which we received very favorable but not trustworthy accounts, every effort was made to push forward supplies and reinforcements to Gen. POPE's army. The troops from the Peninsula were ordered not to wait for transportation, but to march immediately to the field of battle. Some of the corps moved with becoming activity, but the delays of others were neither creditable nor excusable. Our losses in these battles were very heavy, both in life and materials, but as no official reports have been received, except a brief sketch from Gen. POPE, marked Exhibit No. 4, I have no means of ascertaining their extent. Gen. POPE was transferred to another Department before the reports of his subordinates could be received; probably they will soon be handed in. Most of the troops actually engaged in these battles fought with great bravery, but some of them could not be brought into action at all. Many thousands straggled away from their commands, and it is said that not a few voluntarily surrendered to the enemy, so as to be paroled as prisoners of war.

In order to reorganize the different corps, get the stragglers back into their ranks, and to supply deficiencies of ammunition, clothing, etc., caused by recent losses, Gen. POPE requested and received directions to bring his army within the defences of Washington, which were then under the command of Gen. McCLELLAN. This movement was executed on the night of the 3d, without loss. Gen. POPE being second in command of the united forces, applied to be relieved, and was transferred to another Department. Although this short and active campaign was, from causes already referred to, less successful than we had reason to expect, it had accomplished the great and important object of covering the Capital till troops could be collected for its defence. Had the Army of the Potomac arrived a few days earlier, the rebel army could have been easily defeated and perhaps destroyed.

THE INVASION OF MARYLAND.

Seeing that the attack upon Washington would now be futile, LEE pushed his main army across the Potomac, for a raid into Maryland and Pennsylvania. Gen. McCLELLAN was directed to pursue him with all troops which were not required for the defence of Washington. Several corps were immediately thrown out in observation at Darnestown and Leesboro', and most of his army was in motion by the 5th of September. A portion entered Frederick on the 12th. As the campaign was to be carried on in the Department commanded by Major-Gen. WOOL, I directed Gen. McCLELLAN to assume control of all troops within his reach, without regard to Departmental lines. The garrisons of Winchester and Martinsburgh had been withdrawn to Harper's Ferry, and the commanding officer of that post had been advised by my chief of staff to mainly continue his defence, in case he was attacked by superior forces, to the position of Maryland Heights, which could have been held a long time against overwhelming numbers. To withdraw him entirely from that position, with the great body of LEE's forces between him and our army, would not only expose the garrison to capture, but all the artillery and stores collected at that place must either be destroyed or left to the enemy. The only feasible plan was for him to hold his position until Gen. McCLELLAN could relieve him, or open a communication so that he could evacuate it in safety. These views were communicated both to Gen. McCLELLAN and to Col. MILES.

THE BATTLES OF SOUTH MOUNTAIN AND ANTIETAM.

The left of Gen. McCLELLAN's army pursued a part of the enemy's forces to the South Mountains, where, on the 14th, he made a stand. A severe battle ensued, the enemy being defeated and driven from his position, with heavy loss. LEE's army then fell back behind Antietam Creek, a few miles above its mouth, and took a position admirably suited for defence. Our army attacked him on the 16th, and a hotly contested battle was fought on that and the ensuing day, which resulted in the defeat of the rebel forces. On the night of the 17th our troops slept on the field which they had so bravely won. On the 18th neither party renewed the attack, and in the night of the 18th and 19th Gen. LEE withdrew his army to the south side of the Potomac. Our loss in the several battles on South Mountains and at Antietam was 1,742 killed, 9,066 wounded, and 912 missing, making a total of 10,721. Gen. McCLELLAN estimates the enemy's loss at nearly 30,000; but their own accounts give their loss at about 14,000 in killed and wounded.

THE SURRENDER OF HARPER'S FERRY.

On the approach of the enemy to Harper's Ferry, the officer in command on Maryland Heights destroyed his artillery and abandoned his post, and on the 15th, Col. MILES surrendered Harper's Ferry, with only a slight resistance, and within hearing of the guns of Gen. McCLELLAN's army. As this whole matter has been investigated and reported upon by a military commission, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the disgraceful surrender of the post and army under Col. MILES. [illegible] Gen. McCLELLAN's military report of his campaign in Maryland, including the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, is submitted herewith, marked Exhibit No. 5. No reports of his subordinates have been submitted.

GEN. McCLELLAN'S REPORT.

From the 17th of September till the 26th of October, McCLELLAN's main army remained on the north bank of the Potomac, in the vicinity of Sharpsburgh and Harper's Ferry. The total inactivity of so large an army in the face of a defeated foe, and during the most favorable season for rapid movements and a vigorous campaign, was a matter of great disappointment and regret. Your letter of the 27th, and my reply on the 30th of October, in regard to the alleged causes of this unfortunate delay, I submit herewith, marked Exhibit No. 6. In reply to the telegraphic order of the 6th of October, quoted in my letter of the 26th, above referred to, Gen. McCLELLAN disapproved of the plan of crossing the Potomac south of the Blue Ridge, and said that he would cross at Harper's Ferry, and advance upon Winchester. He, however, did not begin to cross till the 26th of October, and then at Berlin.

The passage occupied several days, and was completed about the 2d of November. What caused him to change his views, or what his plan of campaign was, I am ignorant, for about this time he ceased to communicate with me in regard to his operations, sending his reports directly to the President. On the 5th inst., he received the written order of the President relieving Gen. McCLELLAN and placing Gen. BURNSIDE in command of the Army of the Potomac. This order was transmitted by a special messenger, who delivered it to Gen. McCLELLAN at Rectortown, on the 7th.

GEN. BUELL'S CAMPAIGN.

When I left the Department of the Mississippi in July last, the main body of the army under Maj.-Gen. BUELL was between Huntsville and Stevenson, moving toward Chattanooga, for which place they had left Corinth about the 10th of June. Maj.-Gen. CURTIS' forces were at Helena, Arkansas, and those under Brig.-Gen. SCHOFIELD in Southwestern Missouri. The central army, under Maj.-Gen. GRANT, occupying the line of West Tennessee and Northern Mississippi, extended from Memphis to Iuka, and protected the [illegible] roads from Columbus south, which were then [illegible] only channels of supply. These several armies spread along a line of some 600 miles from the western borders of Arkansas to Cumberland Gap, and occupying a strip of country more than [illegible] miles in width, from which the enemy's forces had recently been expelled, were rapidly decreasing in strength from the large numbers of sick sent home on account of real or pretended disability.

On the other hand, the enemy's armies were greatly increased by an arbitrary and rigidly enforced conscription. With their superiority in numbers and discipline, they boldly determined to reoccupy Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Kentucky, and, if possible, to invade the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, while our attention was distracted by the invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania, and an extended Indian insurrection on the Western frontiers. This plan had very many chances of success; but the timely orders of the President, of Aug. 4, calling for additional forces, and the patriotic response of the people of the Northwest, thwarted the enemy's well-formed calculations.

Gen. BRAGG suddenly transferred a large part of his army from Tupelo, Miss., through the States of Alabama and Georgia, reached Chattanooga in advance of Gen. BUELL, turned his left, and, rapidly crossing the State of Tennessee, entered Kentucky by Munfordsville and Lebanon.

Gen. BUELL fell back upon Nashville, without giving the enemy battle—then followed, or rather moved parallel with BRAGG, who, after capturing our garrison at Munfordsville, turned off from the main road to Louisville, along which Gen. BUELL passed—the latter reaching Louisville without any engagement. Another column of the enemy had moved from East Tennessee, after blockading Cumberland Gap, upon Lexington, and threatened Cincinnati. A small force of our raw troops, which had been pushed forward to Richmond, Ky., under Maj.-Gen. NELSON, were met by the enemy and completely routed. In the meantime, every effort had been made to collect new troops at Cincinnati and Louisville, and to fortify these places against a coup de main.

To give confidence to the new levies, a portion of Gen. GRANT's army was withdrawn from Mississippi and sent to Kentucky and Cincinnati. No attack was attempted by the enemy.

Major-Gen. BUELL left Louisville on the 1st of October, with an army of about 100,000 men in pursuit of BRAGG. The latter engaged a part of Gen. BUELL's army at Perryville, about 10 o'clock on the 8th of October. A general battle ensued, and was continued till dark; it was mainly fought by Major-Gen. McCOOK's corps; the enemy retreated during the night; the losses were heavy on both sides, but no official reports of the numbers engaged or the losses on either side have been received. After this battle, the main army of the rebels retreated to East Tennessee; Gen. BUELL pursued it as far as Mount Vernon, on London, then fell back to the line from Louisville to Nashville. Here Major-Gen. ROSECRANS superseded him in the command by the orders of the President. As the Secretary of War has ordered a military commission to investigate the operations of Gen. BUELL in this campaign, it would be obviously improper for me to express any opinion, unless specially directed to do so.

The command of Brig.-Gen. MORGAN at Cumberland Gap, abandoned that place, and retreated to the Ohio River. The alleged cause of this retreat was the want of supplies. The commanding officer, however, had just before reported that he had several weeks' provisions, and under no circumstances would he surrender that important post. An investigation of this matter has been ordered.

The withdrawal of a considerable part of Gen. GRANT's army to reinforce Gen. BUELL, and to occupy Zanesville and Cincinnati, induced the enemy to renew operations in Northern Mississippi and Western Tennessee.

IN TENNESSEE.

A force of some 5,000 or 6,000 men was sent to attack Bolivar and Jackson, Tenn., and by destroying the railroad to cut off all connection between Memphis and Corinth. The head of the enemy's column was met about four miles south of Bolivar on the 30th of August, and a brisk skirmish ensued. On the 31st a portion of the enemy's force was engaged and repulsed near Meadow Station. On the 1st of September the fight was renewed at Britton's Lane, on the Denmark Road, and continued till night, when the enemy retreated south across the Hatchie, leaving 179 dead and wounded on the field. Our loss was 5 killed, 78 wounded, and 92 prisoners and missing.

In the early part of October, Gen. PRICE advanced with a large force and took possession of Iuka, a small town on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, 21 miles southeast of Corinth. The garrison, too weak to attempt resistance, fell back on Corinth. As the occupation of this place by the enemy cut off all connection between the forces of Gen. GRANT and Gen. BUELL, the former determined to attack and drive him from that position. GRANT's forces moved in two columns, one on the north of the town under Maj.-Gen. ORD, and the other on the south, under Maj.-Gen. ROSECRANS. The enemy, finding himself likely to be surrounded, left the town and attacked the column of Gen. ROSECRANS about 4 P. M. on the 19th of October. The engagement lasted until dark, HAMILTON's Division sustaining the brunt of the battle. Our men fought with great bravery and completely routed the enemy, who fled in confusion, leaving their dead and most of their wounded on the field. We buried 225 dead, took 100 or 200 wounded, and captured 361 prisoners, over 1,000 stand of arms, and a considerable quantity of stores. Our loss was 108 killed, 411 wounded, and 17 missing. The retreating foe was pursued only a few miles.

On the 20th of October, Gen. GRANT ascertained that Gens. PRICE and VAN DORN were concentrating their forces at Ripley, with the probable intention of attacking Corinth. The enemy crossed the Hatchie River, and took possession of the railroad north of Corinth, thus cutting off all direct communication with JACKSON and BOLIVAR. He then advanced toward Corinth, and some skirmishing took place on the 2d of November.

Maj.-Gen. ROSECRANS commanded our forces at Corinth, which consisted of the divisions of Brig.-Gens. HAMILTON, McKEAN, DAVIES and STANLEY. The first three were placed in line of battle near the old rebel intrenchments, and the last held in reserve in the town. The skirmishing was renewed on the morning of the 3d, and by 10 or 11 o'clock the engagement became pretty general and continued until dark. It was fiercely renewed on the morning of the 4th, and fought with varied success till near noon, when the rebels were defeated and driven from the field, leaving their dead and many of their wounded. The enemy's forces were commanded by Gens. VAN DORN, PRICE, LOVELL, VILLIPIGUE and ROSS, and their number estimated at from 20,000, or nearly double those of Gen. ROSECRANS. Our loss in killed was 1,423, which would give, by the usual proportion, 5,692 wounded. We took 2,268 prisoners, among whom were 127 officers. We also captured 14 stand of colors, 11 pieces of artillery, 2,000 stand of arms, and ammunition, accoutrements, &c. Our loss was 315 killed, 1,812 wounded, and 232 prisoners and missing. This great disparity of numbers in killed and wounded resulted in part from the fact that a portion of our men fought behind the intrenchments of batteries. Maj.-Gen. GRANT had ordered a brigade of four regiments, under Brig.-Gen. McPHERSON, from Jackson to Corinth, finding the railroad interrupted at Bethel, the latter turned off to the left and reached Corinth on the 6th, by the Farmington road, thus marching nearly around the enemy, and forming a timely junction with Gen. ROSECRANS.

Other forces from Jackson and Bolivar, under Brig.-Gen. HURLBUT, were directed to march on Corinth by way of Middleton and Pocahontas, to cut off the enemy's retreat in that direction. They encountered the enemy on the Hatchie River, on the morning of the 5th, and as Brig.-Gen. HURLBUT was making disposition for an attack, Maj.-Gen. ORD arrived upon the field, and assumed command, but being wounded about 11 A. M., he again relinquished it to Gen. HURLBUT. The battle continued till about 3½ P. M., when the enemy retreated south, crossing the Hatchie at Crum's Mills, about six miles further up the river. Our loss was 50 killed, 486 wounded, and 17 missing. Gen. HURLBUT did not attempt to pursue the enemy, and Gen. ROSECRANS did not leave Corinth till the morning of the 5th. The enemy therefore effected his escape, but was followed for a distance of about sixty miles without being overtaken.

Gen. GRANT afterward led his forces South as far as Holly Springs, and drove the enemy across the Tallahatchie. This operation was attended with several brisk skirmishes, in all of which our troops were victorious. These operations have restored peace in Western Tennessee. The official reports of the operations of Gen. GRANT's army are contained herewith, marked Exhibit No. 7.

IN MISSOURI.

[illegible] Gen. CURTIS, of the military department of Missouri, protested the execution of the military operations which had been ordered in the State. In Missouri the forced, under Brig.-Gen. SCHOFIELD, not only broke up and dispersed the rebel guerrilla bands, but defeated the enemy in several engagements near the southwestern corner of the State and drove it across the Arkansas Mountains, in Arkansas. A copy of the report of Gen. SCHOFIELD, with the reports of his subordinates, are submitted herewith, marked Exhibit No. 8.

The forces under the command of Gen. CURTIS have been particularly in Minnesota, located, it is said, by rebel emissaries, committed numerous murders and other outrages on the frontiers during the latter part of the Summer. These savages were vigorously attacked by a column from Fort Ridgely, under Gen. SIBLEY, and defeated in several well-fought battles on the upper waters of the Minnesota River. These vigorous proceedings struck terror among the Indians, and put an end to hostilities in that quarter for the present season. It is quite possible that these hostilities will be renewed in the coming Spring, and preparations will be made accordingly.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF.

In the Department of the Gulf, the withdrawal of

[illegible] Richmond, and we not likely to meet the enemy in force sufficient to fight a battle until we have reached fifteen to twenty miles, which brings us, practically with in ten miles of Richmond. Our bridge line of land transportation would be from this point twenty-five miles, but with the aid of the gunboats we can supply the army by water, during its advance, certainly to within twelve miles of Richmond. At Aquia Creek we would be seventy-five miles from Richmond, with land transportation all the way. From Kent to Fortress Monroe is a march of about seventy miles, for 5 nights it is impossible to withdraw this army and its materiel, except by land. The result of the movement would then be to march one hundred and forty-five miles to reach a point now only twenty-five miles distant, and to deprive ourselves entirely of the powerful aid of the gunboats and water transportation. Add to this the certain demoralization of this army, which would ensue, the terrible depressing effect upon the people of the North, and the strong probability that it would induce foreign Powers to recognize our adversaries; and these appear to me sufficient reasons to make it my imperative duty to urge, in the strongest terms afforded by our language, that this order may be rescinded, and that far from recalling this army, it be promptly reinforced to enable it to resume the offensive.

It may be said that there are no reinforcements available. I point to Gen. BURNSIDE's forces, to that of Gen. PORTER, but necessarily to maintain a strict defence in front of Washington and Harper's Ferry; to those portions of the Army of the West not required for a safe defence there. Here, directly in front of this army, is the heart of the rebellion. It is here that all our resources should be collected to strike the blow which will determine the fate of this nation. All points of secondary importance elsewhere should be abandoned, and every available man brought here. A decided victory here, and the military strength of the rebellion is crushed. It matters not what partial reverses we may meet with elsewhere, here is the true defence of Washington. It is here on the bank of the James River that the fate of the Union should be decided.

Clear in my conviction of right, strong in the consciousness that I have ever been and still am actuated solely by love of my country, knowing that no ambitious or selfish motives have influenced me from the commencement of this war, I do now, what I never did in my life before, I entreat that this order may be rescinded. If my counsel does not prevail, I will with a sad heart obey your order to the utmost of my power, devoting to the movement, one of the utmost delicacy and difficulty, whatever skill I may possess, whatever the result may be, and may God grant that I am mistaken in my forebodings, I shall at least have the internal satisfaction that I have written and spoken frankly, and have sought to do the best in my power to arrest disaster from my country.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN, Major-General.

Headquarters Army, Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6, 1862.

Major-Gen. George B. McClellan, Commanding, &c., Berkely, Va.:

GENERAL: Your telegram of yesterday was received this morning, and I immediately telegraphed a brief reply, promising to write you more fully by mail. You, General, certainly could not have been more pained at receiving my order than I was at the necessity of issuing it. I was advised by high officers, in whose judgment I had great confidence, to make the order immediately on my arrival here, but determined not to do so until I could learn your wishes from a personal interview; and even after that interview I tried every means in my power to avoid withdrawing your army, and delayed my decision as long as I dared to delay it. I assure you, General, it was not a hasty and inconsiderate act, but one that caused me more anxious thought than any other of my life. But after full and mature consideration of all the pros and cons, I was reluctantly forced to the conclusion that the order must be issued. There was to my mind no other alternative.

Allow me to allude to a few of the facts of the case. You and your officers, at our interview, estimated the enemy's forces in and around Richmond at 200,000 men. Since then you and others report that they have received and are receiving large reinforcements from the South. Gen. POPE's army, now covering Washington, is only 40,000. Your effective force is only about 90,000. You are thirty miles from Richmond, and Gen. POPE eighty or ninety. With the enemy directly between you, ready to fall with his superior numbers upon one or the other, as he may elect, neither can reinforce the other in case of such an attack.

If Gen. POPE's army be diminished to reinforce you, Washington, Maryland and Pennsylvania would be left uncovered and exposed. If your forces be reduced to strengthen Pope, you would be too weak to even hold the position you occupy, should the enemy turn round and attack you in full force. In other words, the old army of the Potomac is split into two parts, with the entire force of the enemy directly between them. They cannot be united by land without exposing both to destruction, and yet they must be united. To send POPE's forces by water to the Peninsula is, under present circumstances, a physical impossibility. The only alternative is to send the forces on the Peninsula to some point by water, say Fredericksburg, where the two armies can be united. Let me now allude to some of the objections which you have urged.

You say that to withdraw from the present position will cause the certain demoralization of the army, which is now in excellent discipline and condition. I cannot understand why a simple change of position to a new and by no means distant base, will demoralize an army in excellent discipline, unless the officers themselves assist in the demoralization, which I am satisfied they will not. Your change of front from your extreme right at Hanover Court-house to your present position, was over thirty miles, but I have not heard that it demoralized your troops, notwithstanding the severe losses they sustained in effecting it.

A new base on the Rappahannock, at Fredericksburg, brings you within about sixty miles of Richmond, and secures a reinforcement of forty or fifty thousand fresh and disciplined troops. The change, with such advantages, will, I think, if properly represented to your army, encourage rather than demoralize your troops. Moreover, you, yourself, suggested that a junction might be effected at Yorktown, but that a flank march across the Peninsula would be more hazardous than to retire to Fort Monroe. You will remember that Yorktown is two or three miles further from Richmond than Fredericksburg is. Besides, the latter is between Richmond and Washington, and covers Washington from any attack by the enemy.

The political effect of the withdrawal may at first look unfavorable, but I think the public are beginning to understand its necessity, and that they will have much more confidence in a united army than in its separate fragments. But you will reply, Why not reinforce us here, so that I can strike Richmond from my present position? To do this you told at our interview that you required 50,000 additional troops. I told you that it was impossible to give you so many. You finally [illegible] 41; Cash, $1; Cash, $1; A friend to the Mission, $5; Cash, $1; Cash, $1; A friend, $1; W. Gen. Banks Served with a Writ of Habeas Corpus—Judge McCunn's Opinion of the General.

Gen. BANKS was, yesterday morning, served with a writ of habeas corpus, issued by Judge McCunn, directing him to produce the body of one of the soldiers of his Expedition, belonging to a New-York regiment, before the Judge, at his office in Wall-street, at 3 P. M. At the hour appointed, ERASTUS ALLEN, Assistant United States District-Attorney, appeared before the Judge and made return to the writ on behalf of Gen. BANKS, to the following effect:

First, that the body of the aforesaid soldier was then on board the Northern Light, and on his way to the Nashville—the transport having sailed from her dock before the General was served with the writ. Second, that the General himself had set sail on the same vessel with his soldiers, at 1 P. M. Notwithstanding these obstacles to a literal compliance with the writ, Gen. BANKS desired the Judge to understand that he entertained the greatest respect for the mandates of the Civil Courts, and would do all that lay in his power to obey the processes emanating therefrom. He would therefore direct that the soldier allegued to be put on shore from the Northern Light, before she left the Bay, and leave it to him to present himself in obedience to the writ. Judge McCUNN expressed himself entirely satisfied with the above return to the writ, and gave utterance, in the most exalted terms, to his high esteem and admiration of Gen. BANKS as a lawyer, statesman, soldier, civilian and gentleman.

Gen. Banks and the Merchants of New-York—Meeting of the Committee for Aid and Assistance.

The following named gentlemen, viz.: George Opdyke; Seth B. Hunt, of the firm of Hunt, Tillinghast & Co.; Nehemiah Knight, firm of Hoyt, Sprague & Co.; R. D. Lathrop, firm of Lathrop, Ludington & Co.; Simeon B. Chittenden; W. E. Townsend, firm of Sackett, Belcher & Co., and Wm. A. Hall, firm of Benedict, Hall & Co., having been selected as a Committee on behalf of the merchants of this City, for the purpose of completing the Third Regiment Merchants' Regiment, to be known as the Eighth Infantry, Col. EZRAS ALLEN commanding, with a view of tendering the same when raised to Maj.-Gen. BANKS, in fulfillment of the invitation extended to him a few days since, met yesterday afternoon in the City Hall.

The Committee was organized by the selection of GEORGE OPDYKE as Chairman, NEHEMIAH KNIGHT as Treasurer, and W. E. Townsend as Secretary. Col. ALLEN, being present, stated the wants and requirements of the regiment, in order to effect a speedy completion of the organization, and measures were taken to promptly effect this object. The regiment is already rapidly recruiting men.

Presentation to Gen. Sickles.

The friends of Gen. SICKLES sometime since had prepared for him by TIFFANY & Co., a full set of Brigadier-General's equipments, intending to have the presentation take place at a dinner expressly for the occasion, which the General, with his exceedingly good taste and judgment, declined as unsuitable to the distracted state of the country, preferring the plain simplicity of a letter, with the indorsement of his friends and fellow-citizens. This was done sometime since, but the arduous duties to which he has been subjected, from his new position as commander of a division, prevented him from answering as promptly as he otherwise would have done. The articles are of the most richest description, consisting of presentation sword, belt, sash, epaulettes, pistols, gauntlets, spurs, saddle, saddle-cloth, (a most superb article,) &c., &c., &c. The presentation letter has been gotten up in a unique and tasty style, the letters splendidly engressed, and, with the signatures of our most distinguished citizens, is encased in a very rich velvet binding of oriental style.

The following is a copy of the letter:

NEW-YORK, August, 1862.

GENERAL: The undersigned, your friends and fellow-citizens, take pleasure in presenting to you a full set of military equipments, as an evidence of their confidence in your bravery, their appreciation of your incomparable perseverance in raising the Excelsior Brigade, United States Volunteers, for the suppression of treason, and your gallantry at the battle of Williamsburg, June 1; of Williamsburg Road, June 29; of Savage Station, June 29; of White Oak Swamp, June 30; of Charles City Cross-roads, June 30; and of Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862.

They take this opportunity of adding their admiration of your patriotic course, in the senate and the field, and your noble example of surrendering all party feeling for the welfare of the Union.

Accept, General, this offering, as a small token of the respect and admiration of

Your obedient servants, &c.,

George Opdyke, Mayor of New-York,	Elias T. Beach, Queens County Judge,
Horatio Seymour,	Daniel Devlin, Chamber'n.
Moses H. Grinnell,	Rufus P. Andrews, Surveyor of the Port,
Edwin Croswell,	George Lamson, Naval Officer of Port,
John A. King,	Abram Wakeman, Postmaster, and others.
H. G. Stebbins,

Richard B. Connolly,

HEADQUARTERS SICKLES' DIVISION, MANASSAS, Nov. 17, 1862.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your flattering letter and the munificent gift which it conveys to me. I thank you for this proof of your generous appreciation and confidence, and will do all I can to deserve your esteem. While the war is necessary for the restoration of the authority of the Federal Government over the people and possessions of the Union, I will endeavor to do my duty as a soldier; when, without dishonor, peace becomes possible, I will resume it as a citizen.

Very respectfully, your most obedient,
D. E. SICKLES, Brig.-Gen. Cond'g.

To Hon. GEORGE OPDYKE, Mayor, and others.

Twelfth New-York Volunteers.

There is no denying the fact that the esprit du corps of certain regiments is worth more to the man who wishes to enlist than all the bounties that can be showered upon him; and yet the soldier is not entirely willing to forego whatever benefits may be deduced from the bounty system. The old Twelfth Regiment, New-York Volunteers, has opened a station at No. 546 Pearl-street, under the charge of Capt. Wm. FOWLER, a gallant officer, who was wounded at Manassas, who is anxious to take men with him to join this regiment. In addition to the chance of joining such a regiment, the Twelfth offers a bounty of $75. Those who are solicitly inclined will join this regiment, if they know their own welfare. The record of the regiment will show that the promotions in this regiment have been from the ranks.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

OFFICIAL.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

STATED SESSION—WEDNESDAY, Dec. 3, 1862—9 o'clock P. M.

Present—John T. Henry, Esq., President, in the chair, and Aldermen Smith, Walsh, Hall, Brady, Reed, Chipp, Mitchell, Jeremiah, Freer, Boole, Allen, Ottiwell, Frement, Farley.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

RESIGNATION.

The following communication was read from Isaac Dayton, Alderman of the Ninth Aldermanic District, resigning his position as Alderman, to date from December 3, 1862:

I hereby resign as Alderman of the Ninth Aldermanic District of the City of New-York.

ISAAC DAYTON.

Dated 3d December, 1862.

John T. Henry, Esq., President of the Board of Aldermen:

SIR: Above is my resignation as Alderman of the Ninth Aldermanic District.

NEW-YORK, 24 December, 1862.

ISAAC DAYTON.

Alderman Boole moved that the communication be laid over.

Which was carried.

MESSAGE FROM HIS HONOR THE MAYOR.

The private Secretary of His Honor the Mayor was here announced by the Sergeant-at-Arms, who presented the following communication, viz:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 3, 1862.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN: I hereby nominate Honorable Charles G. Cornell, for Street Commissioner of this City.

GEO. OPDYKE, Mayor.

Alderman Boole moved that the communication from His Honor the Mayor lay over, and that the Board take a recess of fifteen minutes.

Which was carried.

And the President announced that the Board would take a recess of fifteen minutes.

AFTER RECESS.

Present—John T. Henry, Esq., President, Aldermen Smith, Walsh, Hall, Brady, Reed, Chipp, Mitchell, Jeremiah, Freer, Boole, Allen, Ottiwell, Frement, Farley.

MOTIONS.

Alderman Allen moved that the Special Committee to whom was referred the communication from His Honor the Mayor, nominating Robert L. Darragh, Esq., for Assistant Commissioner of the Croton Aqueduct Board, be discharged from the further consideration of that paper.

Which was carried.

[illegible]

Alderman Smith moved that the Board do now adjourn.

Which was carried.

Whereupon the President declared that the Board stood adjourned until Wednesday, fourth instant, at one o'clock P. M.

D. T. VALENTINE, Clerk.

Lager-"Bier" and the Statute—Under the Concert Saloon Act It is Still Decided Not to be "Bier."

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Justices Ingraham, Peckham and Leonard.

The People, Appellants, vs. John Hart, Respondent.—This case has been many times stated in this paper. The question to be decided is, whether "lager-bier" is "beer," within the meaning of the Concert Saloon law.

The respondent, Hart, who was proprietor of the Volks Garten, was arrested upon the charge of selling or permitting the sale of lager-bier in his theatre. The matter was subsequently taken before Justice Barnard of the Supreme Court on habeas corpus, when it was decided that the prisoner had committed no offence, and he was discharged. The District Attorney obtained a writ of certiorari and brought the case up for a review of that judgment.

Upon the argument, which was at the November Term, the District Attorney contended that the word "beer" in the statute, embraced all classes of beer, whether spelled b-i-e-r or b-e-e-r. Opposing counsel insisted that the statute, being a penal one, should be strictly construed, and that the word "beer" was intended to mean strong beer, as contradistinguished from lager-bier or other kinds of beer which did not intoxicate.

The Court has now, per PECKHAM, J., affirmed the judgment of Justice Barnard. This has been made a test case, and as it behoves all concerned, it is supposed the questions involved will rest.

A. Oakey Hall for the people; Henry L. Clinton and F. B. Stallknecht for respondent, Hart.

Liability of the Husband for the Wife's Purchases—Onus of Proof as to Necessity of Purchases.

SUPERIOR COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Justices Monnelat, Robertson and Sandi.

Augustus B. Tassott vs. Antonio Baglicla.—This was an action brought by the plaintiffs as assignees of John and William Beck, to recover for goods sold and delivered to Mrs Baglicla, the wife of the defendant.

The defence was that the defendant had, prior to the sale of the goods to his wife, verbally notified the firm of John & William Beck, not to trust Mrs. Baglicla, his wife, on his account.

The plaintiffs denied that such notice was served upon their assignees, and on the contrary averred that the firm had frequently sold goods to the lady in question, and that the defendant had always paid for such purchases.

The question in the case being left to the jury, a verdict was rendered for the plaintiffs for the sum claimed. The case was stated in the TIMES of March 20 to 21st inst.

Appeal was taken to this Court, the defendant contending that where a husband has given notice to a tradesman that he will not be responsible for debts contracted by his wife, the onus of proving that goods afterward sold to her were necessary and suitable to her condition in life, is upon the tradesman.

The Court so held, and rendered judgment accordingly.

Judah and Dickerson, for plaintiff; Sickles and Cushing, for defendant.

Decisions.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Justice Clerke.

Livingston vs. Pessinter et al.—Complaint dismissed with costs.

Lawrence vs. Gebhard.—Case settled; all the amendments allowed.

Smith vs. Smith et al.—Case settled.

Eckman vs. Stanton.—Referee's report confirmed, and judgment ordered.

Ivor et al. vs. Germand et al.—Judgment for plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint, with costs.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

Sales at the Stock Exchange, Dec. 3, 1862.

[illegible]

SECOND BOARD.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 3—P. M.

The Stock Exchange was excited again, today, after the momentary pause in speculation noticed at the close of Tuesday's dealings. The operators for the rise in the Railway Shares took fresh hold of the Western Roads at and soon after the early Board, and bid up nearly all descriptions 1@1½ ⅌ cent., without getting much Stock. The New-York Roads which opened barely steady as compared with the last sales of yesterday, subsequently advanced in sympathy and in about the same proportion, as the Michigan Roads, Illinois Central, Toledo, &c., and by 1½ o'clock P. M., the buoyancy on the Street was quite general and much eagerness shown by buyers. At the Second Board there was some realizing, as usual, after a sudden large advance, and there was a free market to sell upon, so that the difference in price from the extreme rates of the Street was not over ¼@½ ⅌ cent. A considerable business was done at both sessions of the Board, and the temper of speculation is higher, if possible, than during the recent advance through the month of October and early in November. The Bull operators, to-day, professed to have nothing new from Washington, but at the same time bought Stocks with much confidence. The parties who have been bearing the market of late, seemed unwilling to meet this demand to its full extent, although a fair amount of contracts were put out on 15@30 day options. The Street was somewhat confounded to know upon what new phase of the Currency question the fresh rise is based upon. It does not necessarily follow, however, that any official or semi-official confirmation of the prevalent belief that a further issue of United States Notes will be voted by Congress, to induce speculation to move in this direction. Whatever may be the particular phraseology or expressed preference of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the form of this additional circulation, we believe it to be a foregone conclusion that Congress will insist upon a direct Government issue, esteeming this form as far more generally acceptable to the people and more promptly available to the Treasury than any other. The demand through the day for the Western Stocks, which are closely approaching the January dividend, was strong, such as Galena, Rock Island and Michigan Central, and it was equally so on Michigan Guaranteed and Toledo, in anticipation of dividends in the Spring. As the rate on the former is to be equal to 10 ⅌ cent. per annum and the whole number of shares is only 26,750 or $2,675,000, the advance in price on the present strong movement is quite rapid. The large increase on the November earnings of the Toledo Road has directed some speculation to that Stock.

Later in the afternoon, the market recovered all the buoyancy noticed before the Second Board and prices were even higher on the New-York Roads and for Gold and Custom-House Notes. A large business was done in the outside room, on William-street:

	Year.	Wed.		Year.	Wed.
U. S. 6s, 1881	104¼	104¼	Missouri 6s	59½	62¼
U. S. 7-30s, 1st ser.	104	104	Tennessee	51	52

The price of Gold went up to 131¼@131½ ⅌ cent. to-day, and Custom-house Notes to 128½@126½ ⅌ cent. After the Canard steamer sailed there was not much done in Exchange. The rates, from the present look of the market, for Gold, will be 145@145½ ⅌ cent. on London, for Saturday's mail, for first-class Bankers.

The following are the bids made to-day for the City Bank Shares:

A Rare British Outrage.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

While perusing the financial article of one of your Anti-Administration contemporaries of this day, I felt very much badgered, until I arrived at the discouragement that the Bank of England had entered into a conspiracy with the Foreign Exchange Bankers of New-York, (already British,) to humiliate generous Uncle Sam, whose money, it would appear they have already had the audacity to make use of to the extent of $20,000,000!

Under so grave a state of matters, he must properly cheer up that:

"Self-preservation demands that our New-York Banks proceed this very week to organize themselves into an associate body, to take foreign exchange business into their own hands, and thus thwart the United States and our money market 'from the control of the Bank of England.'"

And further, that—

"All that our Banks and merchants can do is to stimulate our exports of produce, and to organize themselves into an associate body to buy and sell exchange, upon a similar plan to that by which the New-Orleans Banks have realized so much profit."

It is needless to say that, notwithstanding these excellent suggestions, there is a class of the community inclined to dispute their accuracy, and who go the length of asserting that the foreign Bankers, instead of making use of Uncle Sam's money for sixty days, actually lend theirs to him to exchange for orders upon parties abroad. But, of course, reason with such people, you cannot—they, in fact, put the wrong end of the telescope to their eyes, and won't be persuaded to try the other. There is a class of the community, however, who are more sagacious, more highly patriotic and more numerously enterprising, and who are ever ready to stimulate exports, and who, as a consequence, will provide an ample supply of Foreign Exchange for the "associated Bankers," who, of course, will at once organize to defeat those diabolical machinations of the Bank of England and others you have so properly exposed.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We have advices from the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac to last evening. No important movement has yet taken place. Another body of our cavalry, numbering about sixty, were surprised on Tuesday morning by a superior number of rebels, and some of them were taken prisoners. About forty of them were known to have escaped, and it was thought that some of them would come in. Gen. Burnside has issued an order dismissing from the service in disgrace Capt. Thomas Jefferson, who had command of the Pennsylvania cavalry surprised by the rebels on the 28th ult. Deserters from the rebel army continue to come over the river, and represent their army as being very destitute, particularly in clothing. Lee, it is said, has issued an order that such of his soldiers as are without shoes must make moccasins from raw hides, or do duty barefooted. The conclusion of the correspondence with the authorities of Fredericksburgh, showing why that city was not shelled, is given in the Times this morning, as found in the Richmond papers.

Another fight has taken place near Suffolk, Va., in which the rebels were worsted. An expedition started out on Sunday, and on Monday recaptured the celebrated Pittsburgh Battery, taken from our army at the battle of Shiloh. The enemy (their numbers are not stated in Gen. Dix's report to Gen. HALLECK) were driven across the Blackwater River, at Franklin, with heavy loss in killed, wounded and prisoners. Our loss was trifling.

Our dispatches from the Southwest indicate that the National army under Gen. GRANT is "marching on," while, at the same time, the rebel army is rapidly confronting it in "marching off." The rebels evacuated Tallahatchie on the 1st inst., and Gen. McARTHUR's Division occupied the rebel forts there—no fighting of consequence having taken place. The enemy were believed to be in full retreat. It is doubtful whether they will make a stand this side of Jackson.

The Palmyra, Mo., Courier, which is published where Gen. McNEIL executed ten guerrillas, states that Mr. ALSMAN, whose restitution was demanded as the condition of the safety of these men, has turned up alive in Illinois, as has been stated. It says also that Gen. McNEIL, then a Colonel, ordered the execution of sixteen rebels after the battle of Kirksville, for what offence is not stated, and that Gov. GAMBLE expressed his approbation of his conduct by promoting him. Since the execution of these ten rebels he has had his command extended so as to embrace the whole of the Eighth District, embracing twelve counties of Northeastern Missouri. A communication which we have received from a friend of Gen. McNEIL, states that the ten men who were executed had all of them broken their paroles and were taken with arms in their hands.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, a resolution was adopted making inquiries of the Secretary of War relative to the purchase of land in Portsmouth harbor. The Standing Committee of last session were continued, with a few changes. Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, offered a resolution which was laid over, calling upon the Secretary of War for information relative to the arrest of several citizens of Delaware. The Committee on Patents was instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the Department of Agriculture. A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Public Affairs to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill indemnifying the people of Minnesota for the outrages of the Indians. The Secretary of War was requested to furnish information regarding the sale of freemen into Slavery by the rebels. The Committee on Military Affairs was directed to consider the expediency of organizing an ambulance corps in the army. Mr. HALE gave notice of a bill to repeal the act establishing and equalizing the grades of officers in the navy. The Senate then went into Executive session, and subsequently adjourned.

In the House, a resolution was adopted calling upon the Commissioner of Patents for information regarding the expenditures of the Agricultural fund. A resolution was adopted instructing the Military Committee to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill providing that volunteers who have been, or may hereafter be honorably discharged on account of wounds or other disabilities, may receive such part of the bounty of one hundred dollars as shall be proportionate to the time of actual service. The House adjourned soon after 12 o'clock.

FROM EUROPE.

The steamship China passed Cape Race on Monday afternoon, with two days later news from Europe, which was not telegraphed through until last evening. She left Liverpool on the 22d ult., and Queenstown on the 23d. The news of Gen. McCLELLAN's removal had reached England, and had caused depression in American Securities. The London Times regards the removal as the [illegible] the cause of proving that the gentleman removed has who [illegible] to be a conspicuous [illegible] in life, rests upon the [illegible]. The General Term of the Supreme Court, per FREEMAN, J., have now affirmed the opinion of Justice MANNARD at Chambers, holding that, within the meaning of the concert-saloon act, lager-bier is not "beer."

There was great buoyancy in Stock speculations yesterday, and prices rose on the Railway Shares 1@2½ ⅌ cent. Gold advanced to 18¾.

The trade in Breadstuffs was less extensive yesterday. Prices of Flour, Wheat and Corn advanced early in the day, but closed heavily. Cotton was in moderate demand at steady rates. A fair business was transacted in Hay, Hops, Hides, Leather, Tallow, Whisky, and the principal kinds of Provisions, at uniform quotations. Fish, Fruit, Oils, Salt, and Tobacco, were less active. Moderate freight engagements were reported, with 601 vessels of all classes in port.

Gen. Halleck's Report—Military Operations of Four Months.

We copy from the Tribune Gen. HALLECK's report of the operations of the Union army since he became its Commanding General,—a period of but little over four months. It is a clear, unimpassioned statement of facts, with few comments, and these merely such as any intelligent reader would have made for himself. It has very great historical value, for it covers the most critical period of the war,—that which followed Gen. McCLELLAN's retreat from his position on the Chickahominy in front of Richmond, extending to the date of his removal from command. Every reader of this document will see at once that it involves and very seriously impugns the military reputation of Gen. McCLELLAN.

The first necessity, in Gen. HALLECK's judgment, after the retreat of Gen. McCLELLAN to the James River, was to unite his army with that of Gen. POPE—neither force being strong enough for either an advance upon Richmond or for its own defence against the rebel army which lay between them and could attack either at pleasure. Gen. HALLECK visited Gen. McCLELLAN's headquarters for consultation, and being unable to send Gen. McCLELLAN as many fresh troops as he deemed essential for an attack upon Richmond, he ordered him, on the 3d of August, to withdraw his entire army from the Peninsula to Aquia Creek, for the purpose of joining POPE at Fredericksburgh—giving him at the same time complete control of all the transports in the James River and Chesapeake Bay. On the 5th, he received from Gen. McCLELLAN a protest against this order, in which he argued with great warmth against its wisdom. On the 6th, he replied to it. Both documents are appended to the Report, and it must be universally conceded that Gen. HALLECK's reply, couched in calm and most respectful language, is a complete and overwhelming refutation of the arguments which Gen. McCLELLAN had offered instead of obedience to the order of his superior. It was not until the 14th of August that Gen. McCLELLAN obeyed the order issued eleven days before.

That interval of eleven days was devoted by the rebels to preparations for a movement intended to crush Gen. POPE before he could be reinforced by the Army of the Potomac. Gen. BURNSIDE, at Newport's News, being ordered on the 1st of August to transfer his troops to Aquia Creek, landed them there on the night of the 3d. The details of Gen. POPE's manœuvres, first to detain the rebels in their advance until he could be joined by McCLELLAN, and then to hold as much of the ground before Washington as he could, are deeply interesting, and bear testimony to the vigor and energy of Gen. POPE, and to the skill with which his movements, when harassed by the enemy on every side, were planned and executed. The delay of Gen. McCLELLAN in arriving made it necessary to change his place of landing from Aquia Creek to Alexandria. FITZ-JOHN PORTER, "for some unexplained reason, did not comply" with an order of Gen. POPE directing him to be at Bristow's Station on the 27th,—and his corps, therefore, did not participate in the battles of the 28th and 29th, which were the decisive engagements of this brief defensive campaign. Gen. POPE's forces, however, succeeded in escaping the destruction intended for them, and fell within the defences of Washington. Upon this Gen. HALLECK makes the following comment:

"Although this short and active campaign was, from causes already referred to, less successful than we had reason to expect, it had accomplished the great and important object of covering the capital till troops could be collected for its defence. Had the Army of the Potomac arrived a few days earlier the rebel army could have been easily defeated and perhaps destroyed."

It is for Gen. McCLELLAN to explain the reasons of his delay in obeying the order of the 3d of August. He knew its object:—he knew the peril in which POPE would be placed by a movement of the rebels in force against him:—and he must have known the absolute necessity of a vigorous and rapid transfer of his troops in order to give him the succor and support required. For eleven days he made no attempt to obey the command, and it was then ten more before he reached the point to which he had been ordered. In the absence of explanations it is not easy to reconcile this delay with his duty to his superior officer or with fidelity to the cause he professed to serve. Whatever may have been its motive, this delay saved the rebel army of JACKSON and LEE.

Gen. McCLELLAN was next ordered into Maryland to expel the army of Gen. LEE which had crossed the Potomac and effected a lodgment there. He moved on the 5th of September, fought the enemy on the 14th with success, driving him behind Antietam Creek, where he fought him again on the 16th and 17th—defeating and driving him completely back to the Potomac, and having hemmed him in within very narrow limits on that river, Gen. HALLECK remarks that "on the 18th neither party renewed the attack"—though he gives no explanation whatever of this neglect on Gen. McCLELLAN's part:—"and in the night of the 18th and 19th, Gen. LEE withdrew his army to the south side of the Potomac"—without the slightest attempt at molestation from Gen. McCLELLAN's victorious army which lay within two miles of the river, [illegible] Gen. Gist, prisoner, by order of surrender, embarked with the rebels on October. The only remark of Gen. HALLECK upon this extraordinary conduct is, that "the long inactivity of so large an army in the face of a defeated foe, and during the most favorable season for rapid movements and a vigorous campaign, was a matter of great disappointment and regret." On the 5th of November Gen. McCLELLAN was relieved from command of the Army of the Potomac and Gen. BURNSIDE appointed in his place.

Gen. HALLECK, in the remainder of his report, gives an excellent synopsis of the military operations in the other Departments, which it is not necessary to repeat. He closes his report with some brief but important remarks upon the failure of our armies to reap the fruits of the victories they have achieved, and upon the causes of this fatal defect.

Marshal MARMONT, in his treatise on the principles of Military Science, says that "Generals who gain battles are less rare than those who know how to profit by victory. An ordinary General," he adds, "is only struck by the losses he has experienced, and hardly has a suspicion of those of the enemy; hence arise fatal indecision and timidity, instead of confidence, which everything would authorize." This, we suspect, explains the failure of which Gen. HALLECK speaks, much more accurately than the reasons which he assigns. We lack Generals who "know how to profit by victory." "NAPOLEON," adds MARMONT, "was the first in an epoch who has drawn from victory all the consequences of which it is susceptible. After gaining a battle he marched with rapidity in pursuit of the enemy, in order to obtain easy successes, and to rob him of the little confidence which remained. With such a system a new battle was rarely necessary to attain an important end." It is very evident that our Commanding Generals have not hitherto been of this stamp,—though it is but fair to add that in this particular the rebels have been equally deficient with ourselves.

The Rebel War Policy for the Incoming Year.

The remarkable outburst of passion manifested in the rebel Congress when news was received of President LINCOLN's Emancipation Proclamation, will not easily be forgotten. Resolution after resolution was introduced for the consideration of the body, each more violent than the one preceding it, but all breathing a desperate and volcanic excitement that threatened to alter the whole aspect of the war by making it one of indiscriminate, unsparing and implacable slaughter. The black flag was to be raised. No quarter was to be given. It was to be "war to the knife and the knife to the hilt," till the South was exterminated or the North driven back in defeat.

But the subsidence of all this passion was as sudden as its rise had been violent and demonstrative. The resolutions, after smouldering a few days in the hands of a Committee, were quietly extinguished, and the whole matter was referred to JEFFERSON DAVIS to take such action upon it, as in his judgment might seem best. There was more wisdom in this course than rebel politicians ordinarily exhibit. JEFFERSON DAVIS was left to treat President LINCOLN's Proclamation in a purely military light, and to exercise his discretion as to the best mode of protection or retaliation.

Mr. DAVIS has since made no sign by which we can anticipate with certainty the course he has laid out for the Confederate Government. Perhaps he deems it more dignified, as the Proclamation is at most now merely a threat—a threat to punish rebellion if it be persisted in after the 1st of January next—not to reply by threatening back again, but to wait till the dies iræ, the day of wrath, arrives, and then meet the President of the United States in the spirit manifested by the rebel Congress, or in a worse one, if anything worse is possible outside of pandemonium. We say, this may be the course Mr. DAVIS' counsels are taking. We have seen it intimated that a number of prominent Confederates, of once high position before the whole country, have written an earnest protest to Mr. LINCOLN and his Cabinet against the policy of the Proclamation, and urged its withdrawal on grounds of highest humanity. But we doubt this altogether. All intelligent men of the South understand too well the temper of the Administration to suppose their overtures would produce effect, where the influence of the so-called "Conservatives" of the loyal States had failed. Besides, they would have anticipated the reply of the apt and ready President, that the interests of "humanity" they professed to have at heart would be effectually and instantly secured by the Southern States grounding the arms of rebellion.

Mr. DAVIS evidently keeps to himself the policy with which he means to meet the President's Emancipation measures on the 1st of January. In this he is wise; for he will not then be committed to a programme greater than he can perform. It would be awkward if he had threatened to exchange no more prisoners after the first of next year, but to hang all then in his possession and thereafter to be taken, if the first of the year found his own capital and a large part of his army in Union hands. But with all his caution, Jeff. DAVIS will have to declare some policy on this subject on the 1st of January. The unanimity of his Congress for extreme action, and the instant and unanimous adoption of measures by the Virginia Legislature favoring the execution under State laws of every man, soldier or citizen, captured in that State acting under the President's Proclamation, is evidence of a general and violent public sentiment that Mr. DAVIS cannot well disregard. This sentiment is extending, we see, into other States. Gov. PICKENS, of South Carolina, has lately issued a proclamation on the subject, in which he urges the enrollment of all white males in the State between the ages [illegible] long and, incessant, from one of the dreadful consequences which are brutal counsels (the United States) seem determined to inaugurate on or before the 1st of January next." And as to the mode of redress if once this Home Police secures any national captives, the Governor says:—"All persons who may be taken in any attempt to produce disturbances among our slaves, or resistance to their freedom, whether under commission, or by orders from United States authority or not, shall be, if arrested by any State troops, or State Police, handed over to the authorities of the State alone, to be dealt with as felons."

If any United States soldiers are captured and hung by order of the Governor of South Carolina, retaliation must be made on any South Carolinians that may fall into the hands of the Union army. And for the lives of prisoners thus taken, Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS will have to demand reparation. In this way, whether willing or not, the rebel President will be compelled to indorse the brutal and sanguinary programme of the States of South Carolina and Virginia, or suffer a breach between the Confederate Government and those States, that will be fatal to all hopes of unity and independence. There can hardly be a doubt that the position of our armies will be such on the 1st of January next, that any attempt of the Confederate Government to inaugurate a bloody and revengeful code on the subject of military emancipation, will bring infinite disaster on the rebels. So that in either event, whether Mr. DAVIS yields to South Carolina and Virginia, and goes with them together to destruction, or refuses, and they all go by different roads to ruin,—the end will be the same. They will perish, and the black flag they themselves raised will fitly mark their resting-place.

The Missouri Execution Again.

We find the following paragraph in the Troy Daily Times, of Friday last:

"THE CASE OF GEN. MCNEIL.—We perceive that some of our metropolitan correspondents are apprehensive about Gen. McNEIL's action in shooting ten men in Missouri, in retaliation for the supposed murder of a Union guide. They seem to regard it as of a piece with that sort of retaliation which JEFF. DAVIS proposes. This would, perhaps, be a fair criticism if the persons executed were regular soldiers of the Confederacy. But it was not the case. They were guerrillas—land pirates and outlaws of the basest sort. They were not fighting in regular modes of warfare, but in entire opposition to them—murdering helpless, unarmed men, ravishing women, burning houses, and plundering everything upon which they could lay their hands. By common usage among nations, their lives were forfeited; Gen. McNEIL would have been justified in having them shot, even had the outrage for which they suffered never been perpetrated. Our cause is not likely to suffer from too much severity toward the enemy, but from the contrary weakness."

"Severity toward the enemy" is one thing,—and the lawless, unregulated killing of individuals of the enemy who fall into our hands, is quite another. We are in favor of "severity" toward the rebels,—and we agree with our Troy namesake in the opinion that our cause is likely to suffer, as it has already suffered, from the "contrary weakness." But military severity has its laws, and it is of the utmost importance to those who resort to it that these laws should be carefully observed. There are certain practices in warfare which the whole world is agreed in considering infamous. No matter what the character of the war may be, nor how righteous the cause, no belligerent can kill the wounded, slaughter enemies who have surrendered, or butcher prisoners, without calling down upon his head the lasting execrations of the civilized world.

It is quite possible that the men shot by Gen. McNEIL were precisely what the Troy Times describes them—"guerrillas, land pirates and outlaws of the basest sort,"—and that as such they deserved death. But it is very certain that it was not for these crimes that they were shot. Neither their character nor their infamous deeds had anything to do with their execution. If ALSMAN had been produced within the specified ten days, they would have lived—in spite of their crimes; and so far as appears, they would have died for his non-appearance, if their characters had been perfectly spotless.

Their execution, if it had any military character at all, was an act of professed retaliation, and as such we are bound to judge it. Nor should we permit our righteous animosity against the rebels to swerve us from a just and candid judgment. If it was not an act of retaliation, it was simply a killing without trial, without even an accusation of crime, of ten unarmed prisoners. And as an act of retaliation we do not believe it can be justified by any recognized rules of war, or by any precedent which friends of the Union cause would not be ashamed to quote. There was no proof, in the first place, that ALSMAN had been murdered—he had simply disappeared. No communication, moreover, was had with the rebel General who was responsible for his fate; no demand was made upon him for his return, nor is there the slightest evidence that he ever knew of the menaced retaliation. It is impossible to admit, for a moment, that retaliation of any sort can be practiced with such an utter absence of the forms and safeguards requisite to distinguish it from simple murder.

We beg the Troy Times and other friends of the Government, not to fall into the mistake of supposing that it needs such support as Gen. McNEIL was giving it when he shot these men, or that it can afford to adopt the practice of the rebels as the law of its own action. It holds, as they do not, a place among the civilized and Christian nations of the earth, and is thus amenable, both in peace and war, to the laws and usages which have their sanction. It is in no such peril as will warrant it in throwing aside all such restraints, or in disregarding, as of no moment, the just censure of the Christian world.

A VERMONTER IN THE ENGLISH AT LAW.—If it were not that perhaps one man in a hundred of the people of England may doubt the correctness of the London Herald's statement that a "recent steamer from Liverpool took out twenty-four French guillotines, consigned [illegible] in New-York," we should not think it worth while to mention the matter. It will be [illegible] by Mr. ARMSWORTH that it is [illegible] true. He further states that the twenty-four guillotines purchased only the first instalment of twenty thousand, which Mr. LINCOLN has ordered; and moreover that all of these guillotines are of the kind which Mr. GEORGE SANDERS once desired to see in operation,—"guillotines worked by steam!" Mr. ARMSWORTH further confidentially states that it is Mr. LINCOLN's purpose to have all these instruments erected and in full blast by the first of next year; and that then he will spare neither man, woman nor child, white, black or speckled, until like the Hibernian Napoleon, "grand, gloomy and peculiar, he sits alone, a sceptered hermit, wrapt in the solitude of his own individuality."

We do not suppose that the small proportion of the English population which may be sceptical concerning the London Herald's story, can remain any longer doubtful when they learn the above facts. But if any of the snobs and flunkies who take the London Herald still remain in doubt, we can only urge them to come over here and see for themselves—first, of course, for safety sake, furnishing themselves, if nature has not already furnished them, with wooden heads.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT REPORT.—We do not need to direct public attention to the report of Secretary Stanton, nor to that of the subordinate Bureau of Ordnance. The opinions of Capt. DAHLGREN, however, as given in the latter, have a positive and subjective value possessed by the matter of no other official report with which the public has been favored. He discusses ably, and in such a way as to command the attention of the world, the important question of iron plates and ordnance, and gives some new and very interesting facts bearing upon the ever-memorable contest of the Merrimac and Monitor. He discourses upon the respective merits of rifled and smooth-bore ordnance, and the proper mode of arming iron-clads. Concerning harbor defences, and particularly those of this port, he gives some valuable suggestions. He thinks "that a trustworthy and thorough defence can only be made by a harmonious and just combination of forts, iron-clads and rams, with such other minor auxiliaries as may be contributed to the general purpose; singly, neither would be effectual." And he indicates the defences that are necessary for the protection of the main passage to the City of New-York. Coming from the source they do, these suggestions certainly merit an equal attention from the Government to what they will receive from the citizens of the commercial metropolis of the country.

AID FOR SUFFERING LANCASHIRE.—We are very much pleased that the Chamber of Commerce has taken in hand the duty which we have repeatedly urged upon it, of practical action in the matter of sending relief to the starving operatives of the cotton manufacturing districts of England. A special meeting to consider the subject was held on Monday last, and on that occasion a Committee of seventeen of our most eminent citizens were appointed to bring the thing into shape; and they have now called a meeting of "gentlemen interested in the subject," at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, this afternoon at 2 o'clock, "to take action in the matter." We trust the meeting will be a full one, and that all those who have expressed themselves anxious to contribute to this peculiar and international charity will be present to offer practical and feasible suggestions and donations.

Besides the meeting on Monday of the Chamber of Commerce, there was a meeting of British residents at the British Consulate on Friday last, for the same purpose, at which a Committee of about twenty-five well known and influential British residents was appointed to raise contributions for the relief of their distressed countrymen. We presume it will be considered wisest that each of these two bodies should act by itself in the premises.

We do not think it would be judicious for the Chamber of Commerce, at least in the first instance, to make an appeal for aid to the general public. It would be very easy to raise a first contribution from the mercantile and well-to-do classes alone, without calling for very small subscriptions. It would be injudicious, also, as we remarked once before, to think of sending money to Lancashire while Exchange rules at 146 per cent. It would be better to load a vessel with supplies, and give the suffering operatives relief in the shape of actual food. But we suppose these and cognate questions will be fully and intelligently discussed at the meeting this afternoon.

It is a remarkable and noteworthy fact, which we may here state, that before the subject of sending relief to Lancashire had been publicly broached in this country at all, there was a very general impression among the Lancashire sufferers themselves that they would soon obtain relief from America. This latter fact is brought out in a letter published recently in the Washington Chronicle, and dated London, Nov. 18. It has this paragraph:

"You may be surprised to find that among the half-starved, out-of-work cotton laborers of Lancashire, there is a very strong impression that they will soon receive munificent relief from the United States. They argue that if the people of grain, and evidently remembering the liberal and seasonable relief which America sent to Ireland in 1847. If the United States could be relieved of fully half a million men, women and children, from the cotton districts here, would have found their way, months ago, to the land of the free and the home of the brave. In such present hopeless condition they would be of little use anywhere."

The Russian Steamer Alexandr.

St. John, N. F., Monday, Dec. 1.

The steamship Europa, from Boston via Halifax, was boarded by the Prince yesterday off Cape Race at 4 o'clock Sunday morning, and has news to Saturday morning, through Queenstown, which we publish in advance of our regular issue.

The "Alabama" Spoken.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

The British bark Mary, at Queenstown, 12th ult., from Yarmouth, N. S., spoke Oct. 30, lat. 42, lon. 50 30, the rebel steamer Alabama.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Change Contemplated in the Command of the Army of the Potomac.

NO WINTER QUARTERS

The Rebels Falling Back for the Defense of Richmond.

Announcement of the Senate Standing Committees.

APPOINTMENTS SENT IN.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

THE CHANGE IN THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY.

It seems that the over-cautious army not be disturbed by the extent limited to the opposition From, which it is proper to state that Gen. Burnside [illegible] of the Army of the Potomac, it is proper to state that Gen. Burnside never [illegible] the confidence of the Government [illegible] Gen. Halleck at present; and that since his recent visit to Washington, the confidence has resulted in a very great increase in his powers, and in the flexible language of the contents under which he previously labored.

NO WINTER QUARTERS.

All stories to the effect that the Army of the Potomac will go into Winter quarters are sheer inventions, calculating to ignorance of the spirit which actuates the Government. There will be no cessation of effort till the rebellion is beyond the power of building further mischief. Whatever inconvenience the army may have suffered from scarcity of supplies, is now removed.

THE REBELS FALLING BACK ON RICHMOND.

Correspondence from Falmouth and Fredericksburg confirms the information lately received, that Gen. Lee is removing a large portion of his forces southward, and concentrating them in such a manner as to be able either to march to the relief of Richmond, in case of an attack in force, or to act as a reserve in case of an assault on Fredericksburg.

THE SOUTH SIDE OF THE WAR.

Information reliably derived from rebel neighborhoods, leaves no room for doubt that the rebel masses, including both citizens and soldiers, are at last thoroughly disgusted with the war, and anxious to be relieved at almost any price. The severe losses of the last two years is now beginning to react visibly; and it is impossible that the ranks of feeling and sentiment shall not soon stamp the leaders from the position they have attained by a mixture of force and fraud.

A SUPERSEDING SMITH'S SUCCESSOR.

Rumors continue to be circulated by many to be the contemplated appointment of Secretary Smith to the Department of the Interior, and it is said that the letter has expressed an opinion that he may be the successful candidate.

THE STATE PRISONERS.

The Commissioners recently appointed by the acting Governor of the District to examine the prisoners confined in the Old Capitol, and discharge those against whom are found insufficient charges, have no power to interfere with cases where the arrest has been made by order of the Secretary of War.

When the old cases are disposed of, it is intended that all prisoners arrested shall be at once examined, and none detained without clear cause for action.

THE FORTRESS COURT-MARTIAL.

Gen. Burnside present today as a member of the Fortress Court-Martial, and the proceedings commenced by a decision that the Court should be open. The charges and specifications were read, and the Court adjourned till to-morrow.

SOUTHERN NEWSPAPERS GETTING SCARCE.

An advertisement of the subscription which is now being secretly set in the South, is the increasing scarcity of the secesh newspapers. Of the more influential of them, but a few days ago, [illegible] the people of large company [illegible]

[illegible] GEN. BANKS'S GUARDS.

Numerous rumors are generally circulated by the rebel newspapers of Gen. Banks in the West; and point will probably be [illegible] of a few thousand Banks's troops under a western commander, who traverses the country [illegible] of planters, always managed [illegible] yet often fighting and defeating greatly superior numbers, and always scattering and demoralizing the enemy as they go.

The friends of Gen. Banks intend to hold Secretary Seward to his noble pledge—that he always rewards gallantry and success in the field by promotion; and will call for Gen. Banks the rank of Major-General, for the responsibilities of which he has proved himself an capable.

ESTIMATED VOTES OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

The distribution among the members of both Houses on the first day of the session, by the Street Railroad Company of this city, of complimentary passes over their road, would seem to indicate that the Corporation in question does not consider their interests adverse to such legislation as the legislature deems, and is indicative of the value which such companies place upon the acquaintance of legislators. It may be that a five-cent ride will convert a member of Congress into a tool of a Corporation; but we estimate the virtue and the sense of our representatives at a higher rate.

MORE TROUBLE WITH THE INDIANS.

Information has been received by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the effect that Leonard Clark, principal Chief of the Sioux Indians, has left Dakotah with twenty-five hundred warriors, for Devils Lake, where it is said preparations are being made for a great attack on the frontier settlements by the hostile Indians of the Northwest.

PAPER FROM INDIAN CORN HUSKS.

Commissioner Newton, of the Agricultural Department, received this morning from Dr. A. R. A. Von Wieneraich, Director of the Imperial Printing establishment in Vienna, a number of specimens of paper, manufactured from the husks of Indian corn. Also, specimens of yarn, linen cloth, &c., made out of the same material. Also specimens of maize flour, (the only nutritive substance of the corn-husks) obtained from the meal.

The paper has the appearance (and apparently the durability) of parchment, and for printing purposes is excellent, as is shown by some of the samples which have been thus used—the impression of the type being a great deal clearer than on paper manufactured from cotton rags.

The most remarkable thing in regard to the process of its manufacture is simplicity. The humblest laborer can learn the process of manufacture after an hour's instruction, and is enabled to effect the production of any of the above-named articles in the cornfield itself, without the slightest expense.

In view of the high price of paper for printing purposes and the scarcity of material for its manufacture, the introduction of this article into the market would work a complete revolution in the production of the article.

THE CALIFORNIA LAND TITLES.

The resolution of Senator McDougal, introduced yesterday, calling upon the Attorney-General for a return of the sums of money paid for the investigation of the land titles in California, and other legal services connected therewith, is a drive at the present Secretary of War, who, it is said, was employed and received in some of these cases upwards of $25,000.

It appears that the Secretary of the Navy has appointed a very large number of Midshipmen to the Naval Military Academy without authority, and a resolution was yesterday offered in the House calling upon him for information. It is also stated that appointments have been made from localities where the parties did not reside. There is a good deal of feeling among the members in regard to the matter, and they are determined to probe it to the bottom.

A SICK SOLDIER DYING IN PRISON.

An invalid soldier was recently sent here without the proper pass, and was thrown into the guard-house, while suffering from an acute diarrhoea, and left in an unfurnished cell, without attention for several days, till he was finally found dead one morning on the floor. Such a case is a disgrace to the authorities, and should receive rigid investigation.

REMOVAL OF THE SICK.

Several hundred convalescents were to be sent today to their regiments in the Army of the Potomac, from the hospitals here.

A number of sick will also be removed to Philadelphia and New-York to-morrow.

SUICIDE OF CAPT. ELWOOD.

A good deal of excitement is caused by the suicide, last night, of Capt. J. E. Elwood, an inmate of the Carroll Prison, adjoining the Old Capitol. Capt. Elwood was an officer of the regular army, and was for some time Mustering and Disbursing Officer, but about a month preceding his arrest, was relieved and placed on duty in New-York. While there he was selected as Colonel of one of the New-York Regiments, but shortly afterwards was arrested by order of the Secretary of War, and committed to this prison, in which he has been kept in close confinement for about three months. He was a native of Pennsylvania, known to a large circle of acquaintance, and very popular among his friends, and great complaint has been made in consequence of the rigor of his confinement upon unknown charges. This last fact, by will be somewhat modified when it becomes known that his guilt, generously believed by partial friends, was acknowledged during his confinement, in a written confession of frauds on the Government, which he afterwards expressed to recall, but was unable to rescue from the inexorable grasp of the War Office. The suicide was committed by severing the jugular vein with a pocket knife, and he was this morning found dead in his cell. A military inquest was held on the body.

CAPTURES ON THE LOWER POTOMAC.

Nine white and two colored men were captured lately at Kettle Bottom Shoals, on the Lower Potomac, while trying to cross the river into Virginia. A rebel mail was also captured. The parties were sent to the Old Capitol Prison.

CLOTHING DEALERS ARRESTED.

Col. Baker to-day caused the following clothing dealers, of the "Jewish persuasion," to be arrested and confined in the Central Guard-house, for purchasing uniforms of deserters and supplying them with plain clothes instead, thereby facilitating their escape: Wm. Wolchsmer, Charles Hellen, Wasserkaing, B. Trothman, S. C. Merrill, D. Eichingreen, J. Eichengreen. Proof was procured by detectives dressing in uniform and engaging in the traffic followed by these persons.

WEAK-SEE AMONG THE CONTRABANDS.

The small-pox is raging among the contrabands at Alexandria, Va., and a new hospital, designed expressly for their accommodation, is being erected there. The deaths among the negroes from this disease, during the past week, averaged nine daily.

Surgeon Alwalde, One Hundred and Thirty-second [illegible]

By order of the Secretary of War,

E. D. TOWNSEND, A. A. General.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

THE CASE OF GEN. FORNEY.

The Court-Martial trying Fitz-John Porter, met again to-day, when charges and specifications were established against him by Brig. Gen. Reynes, Inspector-General of Pope's army, and read. In connection with the violation of the ninth article of war, he is charged with disobeying several important orders of his superior, in front of the enemy—failing to push forward his forces into action on the enemy's flank or rear; permitting one of the brigades of his command to march to Centerville, out of the way of the field of battle, and there to remain during the entire day of the 30th of August; this at or near Centerville Station, on the 29th and 30th of August last, &c. He is also charged with a violation of the fifty-second article of war, in refusing to attack the enemy while within sight of the field, and in full hearing of the artillery of the battle; there and then shamefully disobeying and recreating from the advancing forces of the enemy, without any attempt to engage them, or aid the troops who were already fighting greatly superior numbers, and were relying on the flank attack he was thus ordered to make to secure a decisive victory, &c. To these charges Gen. Porter pleaded "Not guilty."

RECENT NAVAL OPERATIONS.

Acting Rear-Admiral S. P. Lee, has forwarded to the Navy Department the report of Commander Percival A. Parker, of the particulars of his recent expedition into the waters of Mathews County, Va., in connection with the land forces under Brig-Gen. Reynes.

On the night of the 22d ult., he received on board of his steamer, the Mahaska, 300 infantry, under Maj. Cunningham, of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, and accompanied by the Gen. Pleasonton and a small brig, the May Queen, on which latter vessel he mounted a rifled howitzer, sailed for Mob Jack Bay. On arriving at East River, the land forces were disembarked at a fine wharf two miles from Mathews Court-house. To the land forces twenty seamen with a 12-pound Dahlgren were added, and this expedition scoured the surrounding country, destroying vessels, &c.

The Pleasonton, with a howitzer boat, and a detachment of seamen from the Mahaska, continued on up the river on a similar expedition. Before returning, the two together destroyed twelve saltworks, and between three and four hundred bushels of salt, burned five schooners, two sloops, and a number of scows and boats, and captured a lighter, and twenty-four large canoes, some of them capable of carrying twenty-four men each. They also destroyed a staunch vessel on the stocks, said to have been designed for a privateer.

The Navy Department has information of the capture of the schooner Annie Dees by the United States gunboat Seneca, on the 17th ult., while trying to run the blockade of Charleston harbor. Her cargo consisted of 125 barrels of turpentine, and 68 barrels of resin. Among those on board of her were four persons believed to be pilots for vessels trying to run the blockade there.

REVENUE DECISIONS.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has made the following decisions: Publishers of printed books, magazines, pamphlets, newspapers, reviews, and all other similar publications, are liable to assessment as dealers. If the sale of a publisher are to those who buy to sell again, or if this part of his business is considerable, so that he procures stock and arranges his business with reference to such sales, he should be classed as a wholesale dealer, even though a portion of his sales is to those who buy for their own use.

The Commissioner also decides—The articles produced by job printers, lithographers and engravers, which are made upon specified orders, not known as articles of commerce, are exempt from duty, as manufacturers. Job printers, engravers and lithographers, whose business is confined to the production of articles covered by the foregoing rule of exception, are not liable to assessment as manufacturers.

THE CONVALESCENT CAMP.

Representatives Covode and Goods, members of the Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War, having heard unfavorable accounts respecting the condition of the convalescent camp near Alexandria, visited it this afternoon for personal inspection. They found that a large number of soldiers there are totally incapacitated for active service, and should be promptly discharged; while they discovered abuses which they will make an early effort to have removed. They attach no blame whatever to Col. Brinkerhoff, the officer in charge, being satisfied that he has done the best he could under the circumstances. There are over 10,000 convalescent recruits, &c., at the camp, of whom 2,000 are from Pennsylvania.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

Mr. Hale, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War to inform the Senate if the provisions of the act passed last session, making appropriation for the purchase of land, &c., in Portsmouth Harbor, N. H., have been executed; and if not, why not. Agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Anthony, of R. I., (Rep.) the Standing Committees of the Senate was appointed the same as the last session.

Mr. Sumner takes the place of Mr. Simmons on the Committee of Finance, and Mr. Anthony takes the place of Mr. Thompson on the Committee of Commerce.

Mr. Saulsbury, of Delaware, (Dem.,) offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War to inform the Senate whether Dr. John Lane and Mr. Mesmers, citizens of Delaware, had been arrested and imprisoned; what charges were made against them, and all the papers relating to their arrest, &c. Laid over.

Mr. Lane, of Indiana, (Rep.,) offered a resolution that the Committee on Patents inquire into the expediency of abolishing the Depot of Agriculture. Agreed to.

Mr. Wilkinson, of Minnesota, (Rep.,) offered a resolution that the Committee on Indian Affairs inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for indemnification of the citizens of Minnesota who have suffered losses from the Sioux Indians. Adopted.

Mr. Sumner offered a resolution that the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the Senate with any information which he might possess with reference to the sale into Slavery of freemen captured or seized by the rebel forces, and state what steps have been taken to redress this outrage on human rights. Adopted.

Mr. Sumner also offered a resolution that the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to consider the expediency of providing by law for the establishment of a corps composed of men especially enlisted for hospital and ambulance service, with commissioned officers to command them, who shall have the entire charge, under the medical officers, of the hospitals, so as to enlarge the usefulness of this humane service, and give the efficiency derived from organization. Adopted.

Mr. Hale, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) gave notice that he should introduce a bill repealing the act establishing and equalizing the grades of officers in the navy, passed July, 1862.

On motion of Mr. Sumner, the Senate went into Executive Session, and upon the opening of the doors adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

Various Committees were called upon for reports but none were made.

Mr. Calvert, of Maryland, (Union,) offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the Commissioner of Patents to inform the House what amount of the agricultural fund has been expended since the first of January last to the time when the accounts and books were transferred to the Commissioner of Agriculture, specifying the items, and whether any contracts are unsatisfied; if so, what is the amount due and for what; also, that the Commissioner of Agriculture inform the House what amount of the agricultural fund has been expended under his directions, specifying the amounts, etc.

Mr. Holman, of Indiana, (Rep.,) offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill so amending the fifth section of the act entitled "An act authorizing the employment of volunteers to enforce the laws and protect the public property," approved July 22, 1861, so as to allow volunteers who have or may hereafter be honorably discharged on account of their wounds or other disability arising from actual service, such part of the bounty of $100 provided for under said section as shall be proportioned to the time of actual service.

Mr. Lovejoy, of Illinois, (Rep.,) and Mr. Olin, of New-York, (Rep.,) opposed the resolution in its present form, when Mr. Holman modified it so as to instruct the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of reporting such a bill.

The resolution was then adopted.

A few minutes after five o'clock the House adjourned.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Fortress Monroe, Tuesday, Dec. 2.

The British frigate Cadmus left here yesterday afternoon; also, the steamboat New-York, Annapolis, with all the prisoners brought from City Point.

Charles Tucker, of the Thirty-eighth Massachusetts, and Thomas Guernsey, One Hundred and Sixteenth New-York, died at Chesapeake Hospital on the 1st inst.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Daily Journal, of Nov. 29, says:

"A dispatch from Fort Fisher this morning says all is quiet below. The Pocotaligo and Uncle Ben went to sea safely last night.

Gen. D. R. Jones is in Richmond sick. There are but slight hopes of his recovery.

A Confederate States navy is now the leading idea among the 'sagacious minds' of the South.

Hon. J. H. Hayes, Confederate Collector of the Port of New-Orleans, has opened a collection office at Pouchatoula, and is doing a regular business.

Steamer Kelto was run into and sunk off the Bahamas recently. She was built in Scotland for running the blockade.

The Raleigh (N. C.) Progress, of Nov. 27, says, Major-Gen. G. W. Smith is in Petersburgh, and in command of a force sufficient to protect the approach to Richmond in that direction.

The Richmond Examiner, of Nov. 29, says, the next session of the Confederate Congress commences at Richmond on the second Monday in January.

The same paper says: "We learn that Barney Shaw, recently one of Gen. Winder's detectives, is flourishing in Washington, D. C., as a detective for the Yankee Government."

The Charleston Courier, of Nov. 25, says: "The enemy have from ten to fifteen wooden vessels lying in sight of this city, where they have been allowed to stay for months, notwithstanding our having means for reaching and sinking every one of them with perfect safety to ourselves. Is Mr. Mallory waiting for all of Lincoln's ironsides to be finished.

Closing of the State Canals.

Albany, Wednesday, Dec. 3.

The Canal Commissioners have resolved to close the State Canals on the 16th of December.

Amusements.

Academy of Music.—Donizetti's Opera of "La Favorita" was produced here last evening to a fashionable audience, attracted by the novelty of Mme. Guerrabella's appearance in a fresh part. The rôle of the heroine is, we believe, entirely new to the lady, and has been studied in more than the usual haste. It follows that Mme. Guerrabella does not feel entirely at her ease, especially as the music is, at best, too low for her voice. Under these circumstances the performance is entitled to a large share of allowance, when we remember, too, that it was also good of its kind, and particularly touching as a dramatic picture. Mme. Guerrabella's forte lies in a lighter style of music and acting than that involved in the character of Leonora; something with dash and spirit in it—as in the first act of "Traviata." Nevertheless it is the privilege of a good artist to make all parts acceptable, and this we may unhesitatingly say of Mme. Guerrabella. In the third act the lady introduced a rondo brilliant by Rossini, with marked effect.

It rarely happens that Signor Brignoli is heard to such advantage as in this opera. He was in singularly good voice last evening, and gave great breadth and effect to the music. In the last act his Spirito gentil was tumultuously encored, and merited that or any other kind of compliment. Signor Sanvo and Signor Amodio sustained the rôles of Balthazar and Alfonso—the first-named gentleman with his usual largeness of style and wealth of voice, and the latter carefully but rather tamely. The chorus did not display much strength or precision; the orchestra, under Mr. Muzio, was good.

"La Traviata" will be repeated on Friday evening, and on Saturday "Dinorah" will be played at the Matinée.

Mr. Jones' Lecture.—Mr. T. Mason Jones will deliver his lecture on "Swift and his Critics," at the Academy of Music to-night.

"Dinorah" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.—Meyerbeer's new opera of "Dinorah" will be played here, to-night, for the first and only time during the season. The expense of transporting the scenery and the inconvenience and danger to which the goat is subjected in crossing the ferry, will make it impossible to repeat "Dinorah" in the City of Churches.

German Opera.—Mr. Anschutz, the indefatigable and admirable conductor of this establishment, will take his benefit here, to-night. Beethoven's opera of "Fidelio" is selected for the occasion.

Irving Hall.—Miss Teresa Carreño, the child pianist, will give her fourth concert here, to-night, assisted by a fine array of talent.

NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES.

The NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES is published this morning, and may be had at the counter of the publication office, in wrappers, ready for mailing. It contains the President's Message in full, printed in LARGE, CLEAR TYPE.

In addition to the latest intelligence by telegraph up to the moment of going to press, there will be found in the current number full details of all military movements in the different departments, from the pens of our special correspondents. Also, all official orders, reports and documents, and the latest and fullest Washington news. European news, with graphic letters from our correspondents in London and Paris, giving the tone of public feeling abroad, is made a special and permanent feature. In addition to Editorials on all the current topics of the day, the WEEKLY TIMES has a page of carefully prepared commercial matter, giving the latest financial news and market reports; items of agriculture and domestic interest, compiled from sources many of which are otherwise inaccessible to the American reader; and marriages and deaths of the week.

The "WEEKLY RECORD," or news SUMMARY—being a careful synopsis and digest of the news of the day, both rebellion and general—is alone worth double the subscription price to the paper, as it preserves in a condensed and conveniently classified form all news of interest, and must prove valuable as a record to all time.

[illegible] Lagrange in the morning, and [illegible] day, if lucky, you can make Grand Junction, about three miles. That same evening the [illegible] Grand Junction, and proceeding by the Mississippi Central Railroad, will probably "make" Jackson the next morning. At 12 noon, he takes another train, and, if no delays occur, he gets to the Mississippi River, at Columbus, the same night. From that point to this, the rate of progress is variable and uncertain, depending [illegible] the number of times the boat runs aground and the length of time required in each case to get afloat; the latter operation, by the way, I have observed, depends much upon the aptitude [illegible] by the mate. [illegible] could cure everything else in less time than it, and, in consequence, our landing [illegible] sometimes more than twenty hours.

On the [illegible] when we struck wood, that the pilots, mate and Captain, immediately went into the cabin to take a general drink, turning the boat [illegible] to the mate. The latter commenced his part of the necessary performance by picking up a handspike and knocking down all the deck hands within reach, damning the while the Captain, pilots, river, weather, his eyes, in fact, everything and everybody that happened to occur to him at the moment. Then the spars were launched, and after a good deal of hauling and pulling, yo-heave-ohing, accompanied with universal cursing all round, the hanging down or overboard of a few more deck hands by the mate, and a few side [illegible] among the deck hands themselves, the boat would be opened off and progress resumed, and continued until interrupted by another sandbar or a wood landing.

On our boat the passengers amused themselves as best they could. A half dozen tables were surrounded by gentlemen, who, with figured bits of pasteboard, were setting the possessor [illegible] of small piles of circular red and white pieces of ivory, technically known as "chips." Of course, the play was only to pass the time, [illegible] just stakes enough to add a slight zest to the amusement;—in short, it was merely a "little game of poker, to kill time." At one table, I noticed a sleepy-looking individual with a broken nose, another, with long white fingers and a Chatham-street cast of countenance, playing with a beef contractor of no [illegible] appearance, but whose chief virtue consisted in a well-stuffed wallet. They were having a quiet little game of poker, just to kill time, when Chatham-street dealt the contractor four "aces." Contractor endeavored to look unconcerned, and "swelled" the "pile" a dollar. He with the broken nose "passed out," and then Chatham-street, after apparently being astonished at the boldness of the other, and studying intently his "hand," remarked that he believed Contractor was bluffing, and then "saw" his dollar and "went" him five "better." Contractor made that "raise" good, and took one card. Chatham-street took the same number, and Contractor had the "ace," when the other bet a "chip." The first "saw" the "chip" and "raised" it ten dollars. Chatham-street responded and raised him twenty-five. Contractor began to look nervous, but thinking the other might be "bluffing," came out with his wallet, "saw" the twenty-five, and "raised" fifty. The fifty came up, and after a raise of fifty more. Contractor grew excited, but, after considerable hesitation, "saw" the fifty and "called" his opponent. The latter displayed four queens: the game ended by Contractor leaving the table in much tribulation and disgust. A few minutes later I walked out on the guards, where I saw the gentleman with the broken nose and him of the white fingers dividing a roll of bills—each stowed a fat roll in his right-hand vest pocket, and then, with an air of calm complacency, walked in the cabin and patronized the barkeeper to the extent of a pair of whisky-straights and another of cigars.

To cut the matter of the journey to this point short, I will only add that I left Lagrange Sunday morning and reached this place the next Saturday night.

I came here, intending to accompany the Grand Expedition southwards, whose object is supposed to be the much talked of movement called "opening the Mississippi River." The Northwest, having fought tolerably well during the war, and being of some slight consequence in a physical point of view, the magnates of eastern and other influential states have, it seems, at length concluded to yield to its wishes, and allow the river to be opened. Accordingly, orders to that effect were issued some two months ago, and the plan of "opening the Mississippi" was immediately commenced. The commander of the expedition, with commendable activity, instantly started for the capital of a prominent Western State, where he commenced "opening the river," by engaging rooms at the best hotel in town, where he still remains engaged in the same business—opening the river. Other necessary operations were not neglected to insure success in opening the river. Several of the gunboats came from Memphis, and lay, up to Cairo, and received a new coat of paint—all the officers of the land forces who could, immediately obtained a twenty days' furlough, and went for home, while at the same time, Gen. Curtis, in order to expedite the opening of the river, ordered Gen. Steele, at Helena, to report immediately with all his available forces at St. Louis, which, at the time, was in great danger from a regiment of guerrillas under Marmaduke at Little Rock, Ark., and who, any moment, might cross the thousand miles or so that separated him from St. Louis, and capture that city without warning.

Now was this all that was done to make sure the process of opening the river. Gen. Steele and command, upon arriving at St. Louis, were immediately sent back to Helena by Gen. Halleck; and at the same time an expedition went down the river to capture Arkansas Post, an important rebel position a short distance from the Mississippi, on the Arkansas River. In order that so important an operation might not fail, the following special order was issued:

Headquarters, Division of Eastern Arkansas, Helena, Ark., Nov. 15, 1862.

Expedition Fort Hindman, No. 1.—The following signals and rules will be observed:

1. 1 whistle, stop; 2 to go ahead; 3 to communicate; [illegible] to attack; 1—4 danger.

II. Gunboats must be as close together as practicable [illegible] signals.

III. Gunboats must be as little exposed as possible, and guards must be stationed on the hurricane decks.
